

THE CONCEPT OF DEVĀ

I

IN THE VEDIC AGE

THE CONCEPT OF DEVĀ
I
IN THE VEDIC AGE
OF THE INDIAN LITERATURE

BY

C. W. J. VAN DER LINDEN SVD, MA, Ph.D.
PROFESSOR OF ORIENTAL STUDIES AT THE
UNIVERSITY OF SAN CARLOS, CEBU,
PHILLIPINE ISLANDS

THE CONCEPT OF DEVĀ
I
IN THE VEDIC AGE
OF THE INDIAN LITERATURE

BY

C. W. J. VAN DER LINDEN SVD, MA. Ph.D.
PROFESSOR OF ORIENTAL STUDIES AT THE
UNIVERSITY OF SAN CARLOS, CEBU,
PHILLIPINE ISLANDS

*Aan Mère Maria Richaria van der Linden jmm.
die haar leven en liefde en gezondheid gaf voor India en zijn Volk.*

*Aan Mère Maria Richaria van der Linden jmm.
die haar leven en liefde en gezondheid gaf voor
India en zyn Volk.*

CONTENTS

	PAGE
PREFACE	9
INTRODUCTION	11
EXAMINATION of the Rig Veda	14
Conclusions	48
EXAMINATION of the Atharvaveda	51
Conclusions	70
Opinions of the authors	72
EXAMINATION of the Brāhmaṇas	75
Conclusions	94
Opinions of the authors	96
EXAMINATION of the Upaniṣads	99
Opinions of the authors	113
FINAL CONCLUSIONS	116
NOTES	124
BIBLIOGRAPHY	129

PREFACE

During my stay in India as a missionary, I met with one problem almost every day. People of the middle-sized town of Ratlām in the Madhya Bharat Province did see in my person "bring a missionary" nothing less than the "man of God". As Ratlām happened to be a very important bazaar — shopping centre —, all sorts of Indians and aboriginal classes were living there. In addition to that I was at the time chaplain of the B.B.C.I. Railway personnel and in those days I had still a free (travelling) pass at my disposal to make my travels easier for the cura animarum among my parishioners. So I had a truly marvellous opportunity of meeting all kind of people. As my "predecessors" had been always very hospitable to every one, people came to the presbytery just for a chat or so, and my parishioners brought their old or newly-made acquaintances along.

In this way I met with lots of people who were always disposed to talk about religion. I met well educated people, even graduates of several English Universities; I met "the man of the street" from Kūlmi Brahmins to the lowest class chowkidār of the railways. And in my talks and chats one point struck me very much "the mental difference" those people made in their conversation talking about gods. The well-educated Hindu did not care a hoot for any deva or devatā. They could tell the most smelling yarns about them, and one felt a sort of contempt of the "gods".

The Bhils and the like I came across couldn't even care less. I should not like to relate the nasty remarks they uttered in passing by places of Hindu worship; even less the dirty tricks they played on some idols. They called every one maṭhian.

pagals = idiots. But — not like to talk about :

narrations about the De. they explained the "holy pictures" they were carrying about, or had pasted near their dashboards. And I may say: one could discover a certain fright about the devas and a certain disdain sometimes. They worshipped them one way or the other, they were afraid of those "gods", but still there was a kind of funny way of expressing that made me laugh. Still, talking on religion and God they had some good ideas that could compete with even Christian concepts. The deep reverence and high esteem shown in their words was really edifying. So I was faced with a problem of

PREFACE

During my stay in India as a missionary, I met with one problem almost every day. People of the middle-sized town of Ratlām in the Madhya Bharat Province did see in my person "bring a missionary" nothing less than the "man of God". As Ratlām happened to be a very important bazaar — shopping centre —, all sorts of Indians and aboriginal classes were living there. In addition to that I was at the time chaplain of the B.B.C.I. Railway personnel and in those days I had still a free (travelling) pass at my disposal to make my travels easier for the cura animarum among my parishioners. So I had a truly marvellous opportunity of meeting all kind of people. As my "predecessors" had been always very hospitable to every one, people came to the presbytery just for a chat or so, and my parishioners brought their old or newly-made acquaintances along.

In this way I met with lots of people who were always disposed to talk about religion. I met well educated people, even graduates of several English Universities; I met "the man of the street" from Kūlmī Brahmins to the lowest class chowkidār of the railways. And in my talks and chats one point struck me very much "the mental difference" those people made in their conversation talking about gods. The well-educated Hindu did not care a hood for any deva or devatā. They could tell the most smelling yarns about them, and one felt a sort of contempt of the "gods".

The Bhils and the like I came across couldn't even care less. I should not like to relate the nasty remarks they uttered in passing by places of Hindu worship; even less the dirty tricks they played on some idols. They called every one pagals = idiots. But — not like to talk about

narrations about the Devas. They explained the "holy pictures" they were carrying about, or had pasted near their dashboards. And I may say: one could discover a certain fright about the devas and a certain disdain sometimes. They worshipped them one way or the other, they were afraid of those "gods", but still there was a kind of funny way of expressing that made me laugh. Still, talking on religion and God they had some good ideas that could compete with even Christian concepts. The deep reverence and high esteem shown in their words was really edifying. So I was faced with a problem of every day-life = the feelings towards their devas — much worshipped and their high respect towards the One, they could not name.

These facts induced me to write on this subject. The research I made on Vedic literature I conclude in this work. But still I am longing to go on with my research, disclosing the innermost thoughts available to me in literature and by doing some ethnological research in the fields after some time as well.

Suggestions I should like to receive and I'll be only too grateful to make use of them.

May I thank Prof. Gonda — my professor in Sanskrit — at Utrecht's University for his valuable help. May I also thank Mrs. Jean v. d. Werve-Attwood for looking through the proofs and paying special regard to my English.

C. VAN DER LINDEN SVD.

Utrecht, November 19th, 1954.

INTRODUCTION

My research into the concept of deva was caused primarily by the simple fact that no very wide investigation of this subject has as yet been undertaken, however great the bearing such an investigation might have on the science of Indian religions in particular and the history of Religion in general. India has often been left completely out of the general history of Religion, since it is not possible to regard the culture and religions of India as belonging to the more primitive stages of religious thought. As if primitive modes of thought were the only important element in ethnological problems, and as if the Indian mind has developed itself to its high degree completely harmonically, so that it might be thought that primitive traits once present were now forever hidden! Prof. Gonda says in "Het Boeddhisme"¹⁾: "Een der meest karakteristieke kenmerken van de Indische cultuur is, dat deze zich tot op grote hoogte ontwikkeld heeft op een primitieve grondslag met behoud van zeer vele primitieve elementen." My own experience in India has been the strongest confirmation of this opinion. It was a daily experience that highly-developed cultural elements were mixed through and through with primitive remains.

It is generally believed and accepted that deva means god i.e. God; but practically no author undertook any kind of research into this matter nor did they inquire whether:

- 1) deva could have been identical with our idea of God;
- 2) deva is the concept of God in the Indian mind;
- 3) deva has been used everywhere in the same meaning.

And here we reach the border of a very difficult terrain, where we shall have to take our positions, not entirely unmoved by our own view of life. Is it reasonable to detect a certain type of concept of the deity as a Supreme Being, or is a concept of "spirit" or "ghost" in the usual sense or something similar given the name of God?

Furthermore: is it reasonable to assume the existence of a Supreme Being on whatever sound reasons, would be prejudicial to a scientific standpoint?

every day-life = the feelings towards their devas — much worshipped and their high respect towards the One, they could not name.

These facts induced me to write on this subject. The research I made on Vedic literature I conclude in this work. But still I am longing to go on with my research, disclosing the innermost thoughts available to me in literature and by doing some ethnological research in the fields after some time as well.

Suggestions I should like to receive and I'll be only too grateful to make use of them.

May I thank Prof. Gonda — my professor in Sanskrit — at Utrecht's University for his valuable help. May I also thank Mrs. Jean v. d. Werve-Attwood for looking through the proofs and paying special regard to my English.

C. VAN DER LINDEN SVD.

Utrecht, November 19th, 1954.

INTRODUCTION

My research into the concept of deva was caused primarily by the simple fact that no very wide investigation of this subject has as yet been undertaken, however great the bearing such an investigation might have on the science of Indian religions in particular and the history of Religion in general. India has often been left completely out of the general history of Religion, since it is not possible to regard the culture and religions of India as belonging to the more primitive stages of religious thought. As if primitive modes of thought were the only important element in ethnological problems, and as if the Indian mind has developed itself to its high degree completely harmonically, so that it might be thought that primitive traits once present were now forever hidden! Prof. Gonda says in "Het Boeddhisme" 1): "Een der meest karakteristieke kenmerken van de Indische cultuur is, dat deze zich tot op grote hoogte ontwikkeld heeft op een primitieve grondslag met behoud van zeer vele primitieve elementen." My own experience in India has been the strongest confirmation of this opinion. It was a daily experience that highly-developed cultural elements were mixed through and through with primitive remains.

It is generally believed and accepted that deva means god i.e. God; but practically no author undertook any kind of research into this matter nor did they inquire whether:

- 1) deva could have been identical with our idea of God;
- 2) deva is the concept of God in the Indian mind;
- 3) deva has been used everywhere in the same meaning.

And here we reach the border of a very difficult terrain, where we shall have to take our positions, not entirely unmoved by our own view of life. Is it reasonable to detect a certain type of concept of the deity as a Supreme Being, or is a concept of "spirit" or "ghost" in the usual sense or something similar given the name of God?

Furthermore: is it scientifically allowed to accept any idea of a Supreme Being, or will that be against common sense and the standing of scientific man, so that even the acceptance of the existence of a personal Deity on whatever sound reasons, would be prejudicial to a scientific standpoint?

every day-life = the feelings towards their devas — much worshipped and their high respect towards the One, they could not name.

These facts induced me to write on this subject. The research I made on Vedic literature I conclude in this work. But still I am longing to go on with my research, disclosing the innermost thoughts available to me in literature and by doing some ethnological research in the fields after some time as well.

Suggestions I should like to receive and I'll be only too grateful to make use of them.

May I thank Prof. Gonda — my professor in Sanskrit — at Utrecht's University for his valuable help. May I also thank Mrs. Jean v. d. Werve-Arwood for looking through the proofs and paying special regard to my English.

C. VAN DER LINDEN SVD.

Utrecht, November 19th. 1954.

So my method of research will be: to investigate what the term deva may contain hic et nunc in the texts under consideration.

But I should like to make one more preliminary remark: not every request for assistance and rescue should be considered as a proof that the Vedic Indian detected something clearly divine in those devas, neither any prayer for help, wealth, health or progeny. Very often the deva-being consists of supranormality seen from our own point of view as humans. Something which no one is able to perform in common circumstances, is now performed by a deva. This deva is someone he respects and is afraid of. Someone that is able to help him and who has unusual powers. The Vedic Indian does not see the borderline between natural and supernatural as we do; we rather call it supranormal.

But ■ soon ■ a hymn implores purity of heart, love to the Supreme Being, forgiveness of sin, one may feel justified, I think, in considering it as an equivalent to our "supranatural" idea in the strict sense: The sense we take it.

I do not overlook the fact that my sources contained none of the thoughts of the commoner, but only those of one sort of people. We do know the family names of the writers of those hymns or theories, and in short we may safely state that the sources to be hereafter examined reflect the ideas of certain circles, let us say, of priestly society. Thus, we are on safe ground if we consider the Vedas as an endeavour of the "scholars" to formulate their own notions in sharper outline concerning the devas whom their own "common" people believed to exist.

In Sanskrit quotations some special letters which were not available in the printing-office are replaced by ordinary characters.

Another problem: may we start where some one else finished on this subject, or are we expected to begin all over again from the written sources in order to draw our conclusions?

Taking into consideration the viewpoint of many a scholar, I for one should like to start in the following way: to control and check the texts, as if asking: to what interpretation of the word deva am I compelled if I want a precise rendering of the passage in question?

We can leave out of our inquiry the etymology of the term deva and taking into account the semantic peculiarities of Eastern languages, deva must sometimes be rendered by "hero" or "king" or someone much feted. The more so as the Vedas e.g. do not give us a true definition or description of the quintessence of the present term anywhere. The contents of the Vedas are mostly a compilation of hymns to pay homage to these beings. So Oldenberg: "Da wollen sie nicht von dem Gott, den sie feiern, erzählen, sondern sie wollen diesen Gott loben. Sie haben es nicht mit menschlichen Hörern zu tun; ihr Hörer ist der Gott selbst, den sie zur gnädigen Annahme des Opfers einladen" ³). I should like to describe this homage as praise and laudation, to ask for assistance, to ask for rescue, and to secure the deva's powers as well, moreover to increase the strength of the devas.

Before starting the actual research I should like to observe, that also the Indian is a human being, gifted with common sense, even the primitive native of Indian soil. Studying some ethnological works one is compelled to believe, sometimes at least, that those primitive people have everything in common with the animals, "those savages" and that they — in some strange way — only derive the title "human being" from us. I for one feel urged to protest against these inhuman ideas of the old evolutionistic school, like Vroklage ⁴): where he quotes Söderblom: "De geloofsboden hebben gelijk gekregen, doch niet geheel en al. Zo gaat het nu eenmaal in deze wereld. Steeds hebben de geloofsverkondigers van een hoge Godheid der natuurvölker bericht maar de (atheïstische, evolutionistische) wetenschap meende het beter te moeten weten. Iets verhevens kon bij "wilderen" niet bestaan, want de ontwikkeling der cultuur moest van het lagere naar het hogere verlopen". So also think the other scholars of the Vienna School.

Primitive man, and moreover the Indian — may it be the aboriginal — is quite able to build up sound ideas about a Supreme Being in accord with the principle of causality. The historical fact whether he actually did build up his concepts about God, is another problem, not to be solved here. Primitiveness may be absence of scientifically sustainable concepts that are clear and "dogmatic", but the ideas of the primitive are no less based upon sound common sense and sober reason.

So my method of research will be: to investigate what the term deva may contain hic et nunc in the texts under consideration.

But I should like to make one more preliminary remark: not every request for assistance and rescue should be considered as a proof that the Vedic Indian detected something clearly divine in those devas, neither any prayer for help, wealth, health or progeny. Very often the deva-being consists of supranormality seen from our own point of view as humans. Something which no one is able to perform in common circumstances, is now performed by a deva. This deva is someone he respects and is afraid of. Someone that is able to help him and who has unusual powers. The Vedic Indian does not see the borderline between natural and supernatural as we do; we rather call it supranormal.

But as soon as a hymn implores purity of heart, love to the Supreme Being, forgiveness of sin, one may feel justified, I think, in considering it as an equivalent to our "supranatural" idea in the strict sense: The sense we take it.

I do not overlook the fact that my sources contained none of the thoughts of the commoner, but only those of one sort of people. We do know the family names of the writers of those hymns or theories, and in short we may safely state that the sources to be hereafter examined reflect the ideas of certain circles, let us say, of priestly society. Thus, we are on safe ground if we consider the Vedas as an endeavour of the "scholars" to formulate their own notions in sharper outline concerning the devas whom their own "common" people believed to exist.

In Sanskrit quotations some special letters which were not available in the printing-office are replaced by ordinary characters.

EXAMINATION OF THE RIG VEDA

While examining the passages *) of the RV. where we acquired the term deva, it first of all struck me that so many citations gave no insight into the true meaning of the word deva. As a title it is used together with functions or professions, that according to our ideas do not show any divine trait; they even suggest a mere human being or something that could be said of a spirit; so RV. 1,1,5: and elsewhere where Agni is praised as being a priest. Moreover, deva is often used as a title and sometimes as vocative without any adjective; so a correct rendering would not translate deva because neither context nor the term for itself show the real content... e.g. 1,23,8: 24,3: 27,4: 35,1: 36,4: Devas lighten the sacrificial fire 1,36,10: 40,6: 43,5: 50,1: 8: 10: 71,5: 91,14: 94,8: 136,4: 184,3: śriye pūṣann iṣukṣiteva devā nāsatyā vahatum sūryāyāḥ / vacyante vām kakuhā apsu jātā yugā jūrṇeva varuṇasya bhūreḥ: Geldner translates: "Die Götter Nāsatyas (kamen) auf die Hochzeit der Sūryā um ausgezeichnet zu werden als Pfeilschmiede, o Pūṣan. Es hüpfen (1st ed.) or schweben (2nd ed.) eure Buckeltiere auf dem Wasser, die Wassergeborenen. Abgenützt sind die Joche wie die des reichen Varuṇas."

Nothing forces Geldner in this text to render deva by "Götter". It is no more than a stereotype rendering.

At times Geldner translates deva by "divine" (göttlich) quite according to what we just mentioned, e.g. 2,3,4: where we hear the Barhisgrass, used at the sacrifices, called as "deva". Here follows a list of passages with the contents summed up above: 2,1,4: 11: 3,4: 4,1: 22,1: 28,3: 30,1: 31,4: *).

Some passages might suggest something higher than just a title and especially the context makes it credible, that one has to accept more exalted and august concept than only the word deva. I believe the Indian himself from his point of view will have considered it that way. But below we shall say more about this topic.

2. In connexion with *deva*s we meet titles such as purohita, hotṛ, dūta, havyavūha ("Opferfahrer") and yajijṣṭha ("bester Opferer") especially attributed to Agni.

*) The quotation of passages does not always contain the same term as that mentioned, but either a synonym or the same thought has been expressed in the entire passage or part thereof.

From the passages we clearly discern that purohita and hotṛ are priestly functions conferred on Agni by the devas *) or sometimes by the mortals *), sometimes by both: RV. 6,15,8: Somewhere else he offers: RV. 1,76,5: 3,9,8: 6,16,3: 10:.

We meet Agni being called dūta which has about the same meaning as "messenger" of the sacrifices cf. 7,3,1: 6,16,43: 44: and again, being sent by human beings to invite the devas to the offering. Although in several passages we hear Agni praised as hotṛ and purohita — his most exalted title — implicitly we learn from it that even the devas need a priestly figure: RV. 3,9,9:.

RV. 6,16,48: shows us Agni as the sacrificial fire and so as a messenger, who invites the devas or who is sometimes used by the devas for their offerings.

7,3,1: we hear Agni mentioned as the "best Priest" and 6,15,8: we hear him called havyavāha "Opferfahrer" (thus Geldner renders). We may infer that here Agni is seen as the power inherent in the sacrificial fire as we said above, cf. 3,11,7: 17,4: 29,7:.

3. Agni has the duty of purohita and hotṛ, because the devas themselves appointed him, cf. 1,31,11: 2,4,3: 6,16,1: This last passage shows him too as the governor of heaven and earth.

The Indians see him as a mediator. Mediator between humans and higher beings cf. 2,4,3: as well as for the devas in order to relate themselves to something higher, which, however, is only hinted at in 6,16,1:.

One may notice that Agni is called a deva among the devas. At times it struck me by the context only, that he shares this title as a special gift. Again we get the impression that Agni is essentially a deva, now and then even, that he is the deva amongst the group of devas. What we want to stress, is however, that Agni being honoured as deva receives at the same time titles as purohita, havyavāha, hotṛ and dūta. In this connection I cannot state that the Vedic Indian was clearly discriminating between mediator between gods and men and mediator only between human beings — or again as a priest between man and devas, or between the devas and something higher. At times however, I could not help receiving the impression that even a sort of magical view on sacrifice and its functionary was playing a part. It does not appear too clearly. Pure magic does not show itself too often in RV. The hotṛ or purohita still works by his own power or sets other forces into motion that profit the devas, that prosper the devas and bring them to higher development. (The texts mostly use the term tyāgh in this connexion).

4. Another characteristic of deva is found here: ṛtvij, that hints at

EXAMINATION OF THE RIG VEDA

While examining the passages *) of the RV. where we acquired the term deva, it first of all struck me that so many citations gave no insight into the true meaning of the word deva. As a title it is used together with functions or professions, that according to our ideas do not show any divine trait; they even suggest a mere human being or something that could be said of a spirit; so RV. 1,1,5: and elsewhere where Agni is praised as being a priest. Moreover, deva is often used as a title and sometimes as vocative without any adjective; so a correct rendering would not translate deva because neither context nor the term for itself show the real content... e.g. 1,23,8: 24,3: 27,4: 35,1: 36,4: Devas lighten the sacrificial fire 1,36,10: 40,6: 43,5: 50,1: 8: 10: 71,5: 91,14: 94,8: 136,4: 184,3: br̥iye pūṣann iṣukṛteṣu devā nāsatyā vāhatum sūryāyāh / vacyante vām kakulā apm jātā yugā jūrṇeva varuṇasya bhūreḥ: Geldner translates: "Die Götter Nāsatyas (kamen) auf die Hochzeit der Sūryā um ausgezeichnet zu werden als Pfeilschmiede, o Pūṣan. Es hüpfen (1st ed.) or schweben (2nd ed.) eure Buckeltiere auf dem Wasser, die Wassergeborenen. Abgenützt sind die Joche wie die des reichen Varuṇas."

Nothing forces Geldner in this text to render deus by "Götter". It is no more than a stereotypic rendering.

At times Geldner translates deus by "divine" (göttlich) quite according to what we just mentioned, e.g. 2,3,4: where we hear the Barhisgrass, used at the sacrifices, called as "deus". Here follows a list of passages with the contents summed up above: 2,1,4: 11: 3,4: 4,1: 22,1: 28,3: 30,1: 31,4:').

Some passages might suggest something higher than just a title and especially the context makes it credible, that one has to accept more exalted and august concepts than only the word deva. I believe the Indian himself from his point of view will have considered it that way. But below we shall say more about this topic.

2. In connexion with deva we meet titles such as parohita, hotṛ, dāta, havyarūḥa ("Opferfahrer") and yajñītha ("bester Opferer") especially attributed to Agni.

¹⁾ The quotation of passages does not always contain the same term as that mentioned, but either a synonym or the same thought has been expressed in the entire passage or part thereof.

From the passages we clearly discern that purohita and hotṛ are priestly functions conferred on Agni by the devas *) or sometimes by the mortals *), sometimes by both: RV. 6,15,8: Somewhere else he offers: RV. 1,76,5: 3,9,8: 6,16,3: 10:.

We meet Agni being called dāta which has about the same meaning as "messenger" of the sacrifices cf. 7,3,1: 6,16,43: 44: and again, being sent by human beings to invite the devas to the offering. Although in several passages we hear Agni praised as hotṛ and purohita — his most exalted title — implicitly we learn from it that even the devas need a priestly figure: RV. 3,9,9:.

RV. 6,16,48: shows us Agni as the sacrificial fire and so as a messenger, who invites the devas or who is sometimes used by the devas for their offerings.

7,3,1: we hear Agni mentioned as the "best Priest" and 6,15,8: we hear him called havyavāha "Opferfahrer" (thus Geldner renders). We may infer that here Agni is seen as the power inherent in the sacrificial fire as we said above, cf. 3,11,7: 17,4: 29,7:.

3. Agni has the duty of purohita and hotṛ, because the devas themselves appointed him, cf. 1,31,11: 2,4,3: 6,16,1: This last passage shows him too as the governor of heaven and earth.

The Indians see him as a mediator. Mediator between humans and higher beings cf. 2,4,3: as well as for the devas in order to relate themselves to something higher, which, however, is only hinted at in 6,16,1:.

One may notice that Agni is called a deva among the devas. At times it struck me by the context only, that he shares this title as a special gift. Again we get the impression that Agni is essentially a deva, now and then even, that he is the deva amongst the group of devas. What we want to stress, is however, that Agni being honoured as deva receives at the same time titles as purohita, havyavāha, hotṛ and dāta. In this connection I cannot state that the Vedic Indian was clearly discriminating between mediator between gods and men and mediator only between human beings — or again as a priest between man and devas, or between the devas and something higher. At times however, I could not help receiving the impression that even a sort of magical view on sacrifice and its functionary was playing a part. It does not appear too clearly. Pure magic does not show itself too often in RV. The hotṛ or purohita still works by his own power or sets other forces into motion that profit the devas, that prosper the devas and bring them to higher development. (The texts mostly use the term ṛtvij in this connexion).

4. Another characteristic of deva is found here: ṛtvij, that hints at

EXAMINATION OF THE RIG VEDA

While examining the passages *) of the RV. where we acquired the term deva, it first of all struck me that so many citations gave no insight into the true meaning of the word deva. As a title it is used together with functions or professions, that according to our ideas do not show any divine trait; they even suggest a mere human being or something that could be said of a spirit; so RV. 1,1,5: and elsewhere where Agni is praised as being a priest. Moreover, deva is often used as a title and sometimes as vocative without any adjective; so a correct rendering would not translate deva because neither context nor the term for itself show the real content... e.g. 1,23,8: 24,3: 27,4: 35,1: 36,4: Devas lighten the sacrificial fire 1,36,10: 40,6: 43,5: 50,1: 8: 10: 71,5: 91,14: 94,8: 136,4: 184,3: śriye pūṣann iṣukṣteva devā nāsatyā vahatum sūryāyāh / vacyante vām kakuhā aptu jātā yugā jūrteva varuṇasya bhūreḥ: Geldner translates: "Die Götter Nāsatyas (kamen) auf die Hochzeit der Sūryā um ausgezeichnet zu werden als Pfeilschmiede, o Pūṣan. Es hüpfen (1st ed.) or schweben (2nd ed.) eure Buckeltiere auf dem Wasser, die Wassergeborenen. Abgenützt sind die Joche wie die des reichen Varuṇas."

Nothing forces Geldner in this text to render deva by "Götter". It is no more than a stereotype rendering.

At times Geldner translates deva by "divine" (göttlich) quite according to what we just mentioned, e.g. 2,3,4: where we hear the Barhisgrass, used at the sacrifices, called as "deva". Here follows a list of passages with the contents summed up above: 2,1,4: 11: 3,4: 4,1: 22,1: 28,3: 30,1: 31,4: *).

Some passages might suggest something higher than just a title and especially the context makes it credible, that one has to accept more exalted and august concept than only the word deva. I believe the Indian himself from his point of view will have considered it that way. But below we shall say more about this topic.

2. In connexion with deva we meet titles such as parohita, hotṛ, dūta, havyastūha ("Opferfahrer") and yajñtha ("bester Opferer") especially attributed to Agni.

*) The quotation of passages does not always contain the same term as that mentioned, but either a synonym or the same thought has been expressed in the entire passage or part thereof.

Veda nur "Wahrheit" bedeuter" (o.c. p. 14). "Ihre" have to be seen in the ancient Indian theologians. The Indian saw "Truth" as the great power behind everything spiritual as well as the physical world; (cf. Lüders, o.c. p. 15) and the author concludes: "Dem arischen Inder galt also die Wahrheit als die höchste Macht, als die letzte Ursache alles Seins" (cf. p. 24). In my opinion ṛta and later Brahman may be considered as God in sensu stricto; however, we do not leave out Lüder's note: "Man hat das ṛta in Indien niemals personifiziert; kultische Verehrung hat es nicht genossen." With this ṛta the devas have close relations: ṛtasya yonim āsadam 3,62,13; and Lüders, o.c., p. 25 observes that ṛtasya sadas will be later on rendered by satyaloka — that is the highest possible heavenly space. When Lüders looks closely into the true contents of this yonir ṛtasya, we learn that they are the heavenly waters. Water, over which one makes a contract or takes an oath. This is the very reason why an oath and contract are valid and unrescindable, and also why a broken word is considered as a capital sin. ṛtasya yonih is "udaka" "water" according to the older theologians (Lüders, o.c. p. 26): "Niemand ist dort der Schosz des ṛta etwas anderes als jene Wasserflut im höchsten Himmel am Nabel der Welt."

Tad yat tat satyam asau sa ādityah BAU. 5,5,2; and S. Br. 6,7,1,2; relate to us that yat satyam, with asau sa ādityah. In this connexion we may point to the work of Prof. Dr. B. A. G. Vroklage⁴⁾, much too early departed from us, in which he ascertains that the sky, sun in the sky, stands for God in sensu stricto, in the old myths and fables. It is even so in every bit of thinking of primitive man. So Prof.

... the very same. The Indians motive for cultus, for sacrifice and rites was always, the deadly fright they had of the tremendous power of the devās and devatās. Yet, I encountered too a somewhat reasonable and sensible worship. ...

... meditation upon satyam (brahman). Several ideas connected with ṛta and ṛtu we encountered qualifying devas.

a) Riāram: cf. RV. 2,27,4; 3,14,2; 4,10,7; 8,25,1; 4: cf. also 4,2,1; and 7,1,19; 7,3,1; Grassmann, o.c., p. 286 translates it as Geldner in his Rig Veda translation 1st ed. 1923: "die Wahrheit liebend"; 2nd ed. 1931: "die Wahrheit besitzend". In my opinion Lüders' "Truth" is right.

the same priestly task, but it should be treated separately as the deeper contents are quite different. Grassmann, in his Wörterbuch zum RV. p. 287 col. 2 explains: "zur regelmässigen Zeit (ṛtu) opferend (ṛj from ya). 2. m. Priester"; Monier Williams, Sanskrit-English Dictionary p. 181: "Ved. Sacrificing at the proper seasons, sacrificing regularly; (k) m. a priest;" and in the Dictionnaire Sanskrit—Français by N. Stehoupak, L. Nitti et L. Renou p. 164: "(nom.-k) prêtre; n. d'une catégorie d'officiants vediques:". All three derive ṛvij from ṛtu and M. Williams, o.c., p. 180 states as basic meaning: "any settled point of time, a fixed time; time appointed for sacrifices and their regular worship, right time, fit season etc., etc." Dict. S.-Fr. p. 164 mentions: "époque, période; saison."

Has ṛtu any connexion in form or in meaning with ṛta? Walde-Pokorny, Vergl. Wörterbuch der Indogermanischen Sprachen, I, p. 70 holds this opinion. So does M. Mayrhofer, Kurzgef. etym. Wtb. d. Altind. p. 122 f. The Sanskrit scholars have had great difficulties in explaining the term ṛta. Grassmann, o.c. 282: "Das Festgesetzte, das göttliche Gesetz, die unveränderliche Ordnung oder Regel. Andererseits bezeichnet es etwas als "passend, gebührend, recht", oder Personen als "tüchtig zu etwas, als heilig, fromm, rechtschaffen", woraus denn für das neutrum der Begriff der "heiligen oder frommen Werke" entspringt".

M. Williams does not differ; however, he gave another meaning in addition: "according to Sāyana: "sacrifice: water". Lüders, Varuṇa, I, p. 13 considers the connexion of ṛta with water of the greatest importance.

Proceeding in this way of thinking we could accept the ṛvij as a priest, or one who makes sacrifices at regular hours, or according to the right order, in accord with the proper rules. So, one could consider this as just another epithet to *deva*s, giving no further explanation of the true contents of *deva*s.

Moreover, priesthood and appointment for priestly duties by gods and men surely do not suggest the idea of "GOD" with a capital G. God is the one who is offered to. Certainly not the one who sacrifices in person or even a step lower, the functionary of sacrifice, who is at service of the haviṣṭān „the sacrificing human being". In this research we shall encounter a great number of adjectives to the term *deva*s. But considering this problem in a matter-of-fact way we certainly do not often feel forced to accept that the Vedic Indian saw *deva*s as God, in the strict sense. But if he ever did, he certainly did here, where we discover some connexion with the term ṛta.

Lüders holds that in the Vedas ṛta means Truth. "Ich behaupte nun, dass ihre Erklärung durchaus richtig ist und dass ṛta auch im Veda nur "Wahrheit" bedeutet" (o.c. p. 14). "Ihre" have to be seen as the ancient Indian theologians. The Indian saw "Truth" as the great power behind everything spiritual as well as the physical world; (cf. Lüders, o.c. p. 15) and the author concludes: "Dem arischen Inder galt also die Wahrheit als die höchste Macht, als die letzte Ursache alles Seins" (cf. p. 24). In my opinion ṛta and later Brahman may be considered as God in sensu stricto; however, we do not leave out Lüder's note: "Man hat das ṛta in Indien niemals personifiziert; kultische Verehrung hat es nicht genossen." With this ṛta the devas have close relations: ṛtasya yonim āsadam 3,62,13; and Lüders, o.c., p. 25 observes that ṛtasya sadā will be later on rendered by satyaloka — that is the highest possible heavenly space. When Lüders looks closely into the true contents of this yonir ṛtasya, we learn that they are the heavenly waters. Water, over which one makes a contract or takes an oath. This is the very reason why an oath and contract are valid and unrescindable, and also why a broken word is considered as a capital sin. ṛtasya yonih is "udaka" "water" according to the older theologians (Lüders, o.c. p. 26): "Niemals ist dort der Schosz des ṛta etwas anderes als jene Wasserflut im höchsten Himmel am Nabel der Welt."

Tad yat tat satyam asau sa ādityah BAU. 5,5,2; and S. Br. 6,7,1,2; relate to us that yat satyam, with asau sa ādityah. In this connexion we may point to the work of Prof. Dr. B. A. G. Vroklage¹⁾, much too early departed from us, in which he ascertains that the sky, sun in the sky, stands for God in sensu stricto, in the old myths and fables. It is even so in every bit of thinking of primitive man. So Prof. Gonda told me in a conversation about this subject, when we spoke about the lack of cultus in Brahman: "The ancient Indian generally speaking, did not revere that which he did not fear." My own experience taught me the very same. The Indians motive for cultus, for sacrifice and rites was always, the deadly fright they had of the tremendous power of the devās and devatās. Yet, I encountered too a somewhat reasonable and sensible worship, a sort of religious-minded submissiveness to Atmā-Brahman. I should like to formulate this in this way: public and popular worship and cultus of the dreaded devas, and private devotion and meditation upon satyam (brahman). Several ideas connected with ṛta and ṛta we encountered qualifying devas.

1) Ritāyam: cf. RV. 2,27,4; 3,14,2; 4,10,7; 8,25,1; 4: cf. also 4,2,1; and 7,1,19; 7,3,1: Grassmann, o.c., p. 286 translates it as Geldner in his Rig Veda translation 1st ed. 1923: "die Wahrheit liebend"; 2nd ed. 1951: "die Wahrheit besitzend". In my opinion Lüders' "Truth" is right.

Noteworthy in this connexion is that ṛtāvan occurs most often with the Adityas, especially Mitra-Varuṇa and also with Agni. The number of occurrences of this word with the other devas is negligible. Only Heaven-and-Earth are connected with it a few times more than the group of devas. It is strange that it is closely connected with Varuṇa as he is considered the defender and trustee of the ṛta?

Sometimes we meet the feminine ṛtavārī with devī RV. 4,56,2: and Geldner translates here: "Gesetztreu".

b) ṛtajāta RV. 9,108,8: Lüders renders this rightly as: "Aus der Wahrheit erzeugt" (o.c., p. 23) and Grassmann, o.c., p. 286: "durch das heilige Opferwerk erzeugt; heilig geartet, heilig". It is used for Agni, the Adityas, the Maruts and in texts of praises.

c) ṛtapejas cf. 5,66,1: which Geldner renders: "dessen Schmuck das Gesetz ist".

Grassmann, o.c. 286: "herrliche Gestalt habend". It is worth noticing that this only once-occurring term is used for Varuṇa.

d) ṛtā-vṛdh. Lüders: "durch die Wahrheit wachsend" 10,65,3: and again Grassmann: "an Recht, Gerechtigkeit, Frömmigkeit sich freuend". Most often used for Mitra-Varuṇa, it does occur with the devas as well. Geldner renders more like Lüders: "die Mehrer der Wahrheit", cf. RV. 6,50,14:.

e) RV. 9,108,8: calls Soma ṛtam brhat: "the solid (or fundamental) ⁶⁾ Truth". Or according to Geldner: "das hohe Gesetz selbst". It is not clear why the 2nd edition changed the translation of ṛta: "Wahrheit" (of 1st ed.) into "Gesetz".

f) ṛta causes dakṣam "Tatkraft" (so Geldner) to the deva. ṛtam ṛtena śapantṣīram dakṣam āiāte RV. 5,68,4: It keeps the devas together cf. 10,12,2: devo devān paṇibhū ṛtena. Devah is Agni. Geldner renders ṛtena by "Opferordnung", while he translates in 10,37,1: ṛtam by: "dieses wahre Wort". There we read maho devāya tad ṛtam śaparyata: "Dem grossen Gotte (Sūrya) weiht dieses wahre (Wort)".

g) Together with ṛtu I found ṛtupā ṛtūnām: "Hüter der Zeiten", cf. 5,12,3: as an epithet to deva Agni. But Grassmann translates the following texts by: "zur regelmässigen Opferzeit trinkend". RV. 3,20,4: 47,3: 4,34,7: 5,12,3:.

5. A number of passages in the RV. in which deva occurs — it is true — do not show any direct deeper meaning, but the context does certainly point out to us, that deva is someone very high, exalted and mighty. Something that is far superior to us. So 1,1,5: Agne hoṭā karikratuḥ satyaś citraśravastamaḥ devo devebbir ā gamat. An yeva dhārāśaṅcantī pīpayad deva citrā, tām asmabhyam pramatiṃ jātavedo vaśo rātra sumatiṃ viśvajanyām. "Deine Fürsorge, O Agni, die wie der Strom des Berges unversieglich quillt, die wunderbare, o

 Gott, die gewähre uns, o Jātavedas, (und) deine Gunst, die allen Menschen gehört, du Guter" (Geldner's rendering). Here we find such an accumulation of adjectives and appositions: parvatasīya, dhārāśa- cantī pīpayad, citra, pramatiṃ, sumatiṃ, that we certainly receive the impression of someone august and exalted. Super-human. Elsewhere we come across epithets, that do not point to something strictly divine, but doubtless hint at some sublime being e.g. 3,9,1; and 4,1,1: subhāgam where Geldner renders in his 1st ed. "hold", but in the 2nd ed. he changed that into "schönleuchtend" or better "reich"; sudidi- tiṃ; "thoroughly brilliant", or anehasam "unangefochten". 3,16,3: speaks of svadīryam "hero-like courage", so 3,26,1: speaks of anuṣṭayam
 "sticking to a once given word" and svarvidam "finder of the sun".
 Elsewhere it occurs: (cf. 3,59,6:) deva described as dyumnas citra- śravastamaḥ: "ruhmgelänzend seine Herrlichkeit". (Geldner) Again 6,49,9: we find purely "human" adjectives, but their accumulations make us believe that the composer wanted to indicate something more sublime than the terms directly express. Other passages name the devas: "pure": pāvakaḥ (cf. 7,3,1:) and "exalted" pramahasah (7,66,2): trivamahasah (10,93,3:) "allherrlich" as Geldner renders it.
 Or puṣkarasraj "crowned by lotuses (10,184,2:)." Leaving out the context no one should doubt that there is any forcing argument in those terms for accepting a divine or supernatural being. But reading, I should like to say, casting those hymns and considering the accumulations of adjectives, one is struck by the helplessness in expressing a sublime dignity. They suggest something superior. More I cannot prove and do not want to state.

In the end we find some texts, where we observe a deva, in casu Agni mentioned as deva devas cf. 4,2,1: Moreover there occur a number of passages that look quite similar, cf. 4,2,1: martyeṣu amṛta:
 "the immortal among the mortals, or "possessor of Truth" ṛtāvan, and again deva devas. The context suggests that the being concerned has been granted the privilege to partake of the title deva: as a most august mortal, he is praised a deva. However, 4,1,9: points out quite clearly that the Vedic Indian did set the deva as belonging to a superhuman sphere: deva martya sadhanisvam āpa, and Geldner renders:
 "Du Gott bist in die Gemeinschaft der Sterblichen eingetreten". So

Noteworthy in this connexion is that ṛtāvan occurs most often with the Adityas, especially Mitra-Varuṇa and also with Agni. The number of occurrences of this word with the other devas is negligible. Only Heaven-and-Earth are connected with it a few times more than the group of devas. It is strange that it is closely connected with Varuṇa as he is considered the defender and trustee of the ṛta?

Sometimes we meet the feminine ṛtavārī with devī RV. 4,56,2: and Geldner translates here: "Gesetztreu".

b) ṛtajāta RV. 9,108,8: Lüders renders this rightly as: "Aus der Wahrheit erzeugt" (o.c., p. 23) and Grassmann, o.c., p. 286: "durch das heilige Opferwerk erzeugt; heilig geartet, heilig". It is used for Agni, the Adityas, the Maruts and in texts of praises.

c) ṛtapasas cf. 5,66,1: which Geldner renders: "dessen Schmuck das Gesetz ist".

Grassmann, o.c. 286: "herrliche Gestalt habend". It is worth noticing that this only once-occurring term is used for Varuṇa.

d) ṛtā-vṛdh. Lüders: "durch die Wahrheit wachsend" 10,65,3: and again Grassmann: "an Recht, Gerechtigkeit, Frömmigkeit sich freuend". Most often used for Mitra-Varuṇa, it does occur with the devas as well. Geldner renders more like Lüders: "die Mehrer der Wahrheit", cf. RV. 6,50,14:.

e) RV. 9,108,8: calls Soma ṛtam brhat: "the solid (or fundamental) ⁵⁾ Truth". Or according to Geldner: "das hohe Gesetz selbst". It is not clear why the 2nd edition changed the translation of ṛta: "Wahrheit" (of 1st ed.) into "Gesetz".

f) ṛta causes dakṣam "Tatkraft" (so Geldner) to the deva. ṛtam ṛtena śapantesīraṃ dakṣam āiāte RV. 5,68,4: It keeps the devas together cf. 10,12,2: devo devān paribhūr ṛtena. Devah is Agni. Geldner renders ṛtena by "Opferordnung", while he translates in 10,37,1: ṛtam by: "dieses wahre Wort". There we read maho devāya tad ṛtam śaparyata: "Dem grossen Gotte (Sūrya) weiht dieses wahre (Wort)".

g) Together with ṛtu I found ṛtupā ṛtūnām: "Hüter der Zeiten", cf. 5,12,3: as an epithet to deva Agni. But Grassmann translates the following texts by: "zur regelmässigen Opferzeit trinkend". RV. 3,20,4: 47,3: 4,34,7: 5,12,3:.

5. A number of passages in the RV. in which deva occurs — it is true — do not show any direct deeper meaning, but the context does certainly point out to us, that deva is someone very high, exalted and mighty. Something that is far superior to us. So 1,1,5: Agnir hotā kavikratuh satya citraśravastamah deva devebhīr ā gamat. An accumulation of qualities as hotā, kavikratuh, citraśravastamah certainly does suggest something more behind deva. So does 2,2,6: 3,1: 28,1: 33,15: 3,1,1: 7,9: 14,5: 53,15. And 3,57,6: yā te agne parvatas- yetva dhārāśācanti pipayad deva citrā, tām asmabhyam pramatim jātavedo vaso rāsva sumatim visvajanyām. "Deine Fürsorge, O Agni, die wie der Strom des Berges unversieglich quillt, die wunderbare, o Gott, die gewähre uns, o Jātavedas, (und) deine Gunst, die allen Menschen gehört, du Guter" (Geldner's rendering). Here we find such an accumulation of adjectives and appositions: parvatasya, dhārāśācanti pipayad, citra, pramatim, sumatim, that we certainly receive the impression of someone august and exalted. Super-human. Elsewhere we come across epithets, that do not point to something strictly divine, but doubtless hint at some sublime being e.g. 3,9,1: and 4,1,1: subhāgam where Geldner renders in his 1st ed. "hold", but in the 2nd ed. he changed that into "schönleuchtend" or better "reich"; sudīditi: "thoroughly brilliant", or anehasam "unangefochten". 3,16,3: speaks of sutiryam "herolike courage", so 3,26,1: speaks of anuśatyam "sticking to a once given word" and svarvidam "finder of the sun". Elsewhere it occurs: (cf. 3,59,6:) deva described as dymnam citraśravastamam: "ruhmglanzend seine Herrlichkeit". (Geldner) Again 6,49,9: we find purely "human" adjectives, but their accumulations make us believe that the composer wanted to indicate something more sublime than the terms directly express. Other passages name the deva: "pure": pāvakah (cf. 7,3,1:) and "exalted" pramahasah (7,66,2): vīramahasah (10,93,3:) "allherrlich" as Geldner renders it. Or puṣkarairaj "crowned by lotuses (10,184,2:)." Leaving out the context no one should doubt that there is any forcing argument in those terms for accepting a divine or supernormal being. But reading, I should like to say, tasting those hymns and considering the accumulations of adjectives, one is struck by the helplessness in expressing a sublime dignity. They suggest something superior. More I cannot prove and do not want to state.

In the end we find some texts, where we observe a deva, in case Agni mentioned as deva deveṣu cf. 4,2,1: Moreover there occur a number of passages that look quite similar, cf. 4,2,1: martyeṣu amṛta: "the immortal among the mortals, or "possessor of Truth" ṛtāvan, and again deva deveṣu. The context suggests that the being concerned has been granted the privilege to partake of the title deva ... clearly that the human sphere

"Du Gott bist ... mit Gemeinschaft der Sterblichen eingetreten". So Geldner renders:

we may now already conclude that any meaning of the term deva that implies less than superhuman power, certainly is not sure, as in those cases no meaning would be left at all. So it is no rash conclusion to state that the composers of the RV. considered deva as something superhuman.

6. The devas are named as protectors of mankind and as governing nations. This trait occurs in several gradations and shades: carṣaṇīdhṛt (1,3,7: 4,17,20:) Governing races. cf. 8,96,20: 4,1,2: 3,37,4: 59,6: and protecting nations: 10,89,1:. Frequently we hear the devas invoked for their protection sakṣva cf. 1,42,1: and śarmant syāma tava: "we want to be under your protection and guardianship", cf. 1,94,13:. I do not want to say that one would meet everywhere this idea in the strict sense of protection: several circumlocutions do occur e.g. evayātā durmatīṇām: "one who wards off mishap." Or: hantā pāpasya "killer of evil"; tratā viprasya "protector of the wise": rakṣaṇam cf. 1,129,11:. Numberless times passages occur where the context vaguely or clearly points to this protecting trait of character of the devas, even favour and friendship included, cf. 1,138,1: 139,1: 3: 6: *). Elsewhere we read calls like: āre asmad cf. 4,11,6: in order to keep evil far off. So they ward off enemies and protect against hatred and ill-will, cf. 6,2,11: *).

Some devas receive the epithet of protector in all kind of forms and shades. Agni e.g. 5,4,8: 6,2,11: 3,1: 11,6: 13,1: 14,4: 16,27: 30: 32: and 6,51,13:. Indra 6,44,7: 45,5: 47,20: 21: 29: 46,6: 8: 9:, Savitr 6,50,8: The Aśvins 10,93,6: Viśve devas 5,42,16: where Geldner translates: "Jeder Gott soll für mich gut zu errufen sein", cf. also 5,50,2: 10,93,3:. These calls for help and rescue and protection occur so frequently, that we feel forced to believe, that their protective powers and, implicitly, their supremacy over ill and evil, are some of the most characteristic traits of the concept of deva.

However, we come across the interesting passage 1,96,1: *) devā agniṃ dhārayan, which Geldner renders: "die Götter erhalten Agni den Schätzespender". Agni is not the one who protects, but the person whom the devas protect and keep in being.

Another aspect of protecting the term asidh teaches us, cf. 1,89,3: 13,9: 3,58,7: 4,32,24: 45,4: 5,46,4: 9,86,18:. This term is translated by M. Williams, p. 108: "not doing harm, uninjured, unfatigued, pious, peaceable;" Though outwardly quite negative, one is able to discover some positive nuance, i.e. their inner nature and true being is peaceful and is not out harm; and so by inmost feeling they are against distress and evil.

7. Another quality ascribed to the devas is that of drinking the somadraught. Everywhere we find invitations to somapīti: "the drinking of Soma". So: Sutam ā ganta cf. 1,3,8: and passim in RV. the devas are pressed for this heavenly and sacrificial feast⁹).

Examining the 9th maṇḍala of the RV. we discern quite clearly that to drink the Soma and the invitation to do so, is something essential and peculiar to the devas. They like it (9,62,21:) and it has been pressed most of all for them, cf. 9,99,7: 103,6: 105,3: 109,5: 12: etc. According to the Indian way of thinking we do find here a specific means of discrimination between devas and other beings. Soma belongs to the deva. By pressing the soma and its libations one propitiates the devas; and by means of the somadraught one is able to receive any gift from them. Even at times we come across soma mentioned as deva.

8. Another adjective used in connection with the devas or with the names of several of them is: adruḥ. Grassmann, p. 41, renders: "nicht schädigend, wohlwollend (von den Göttern)" and quite rightly he translates this expression as "without harm". Williams, o.c. p. 19 translates: "oldner translates: "ohne Falsch, 1,21: 4,56,2: 5,68,4: Another term with about the same contents is adabha. It too means "without treachery and falsity", but it still has some other shades. Therein is a nuance of: "reliable" or "zuverlässig", especially where it is related to a protective force and the will to protect, of the devas, cf. 5,86,5: A. A. Macdonell in Vedic Mythology, p. 18 considers this epithet as certain proof of the moral character of the devas: "The character of the Vedic gods is also moral", he states. "All the gods are "true" and "not deceitful", being throughout the friends and guardians of honesty and righteousness."

Even nowadays the Indian considers this trait of character as the highest virtue. He has a certain respect for simpleness and for someone that does not fathom his aims. The Indian like any oriental considers tricks and deceit as a kind of sharpwittedness and sagacity. But still, he feels the meanness of it too. He has respect for the noble soul, who does not surmise deceit and fraud. On the contrary he does not feel like appreciating the one who sees through him. Moreover he feels cheated himself, if someone, though kind and thoughtful, still believes that he could be hoodwinked also. Why does he feel hurt? Because in the man's behaviour he detects a kind of fraud. On the other hand, he does not like outspokenness and a talk straight from the shoulder. In the mentality of the Indian of to-day, we clearly find the emotional value of adruḥ and adabha "deceitless". But if one may agree with Macdonell's opinion, that we may now already conclude that any meaning of the term deva that implies less than superhuman power, certainly is not sure, as in those cases no meaning would be left at all. So it is no rash conclusion to state that the composers of the RV. considered deva as something superhuman.

6. The devas are named as protectors of mankind and as governing nations. This trait occurs in several gradations and shades: carṣaṇīdhṛt (1,3,7: 4,17,20:) Governing races. cf. 8,96,20: 4,1,2: 3,37,4: 59,6: and protecting nations: 10,89,1:. Frequently we hear the devas invoked for their protection saṁśva cf. 1,42,1: and śarmant syāma tava: "we want to be under your protection and guardianship", cf. 1,94,13:. I do not want to say that one would meet everywhere this idea in the strict sense of protection: several circumlocutions do occur e.g. evayātā durmatīṇām: "one who wards off mishap." Or: hantā pāpasya "killer of evil"; tratā viprasya "protector of the wise": raṁṣaṇam cf. 1,129,11:. Numberless times passages occur where the context vaguely or clearly points to this protecting trait of character of the devas, even favour and friendship included, cf. 1,138,1: 139,1: 3: 6: 6). Elsewhere we read calls like: āre aṁmad cf. 4,11,6: in order to keep evil far off. So they ward off enemies and protect against hatred and ill-will, cf. 6,2,11: 7).

Some devas receive the epithet of protector in all kind of forms and shades. Agni e.g. 5,4,8: 6,2,11: 3,1: 11,6: 13,1: 14,4: 16,27: 30: 32: and 6,51,13:. Indra 6,44,7: 45,5: 47,20: 21: 29: 46,6: 8: 9:, Savitr 6,50,8: The Āśvins 10,93,6: Viśve devas 5,42,16: where Geldner translates: "Jeder Gott soll für mich gut zu errufen sein", cf. also 5,50,2: 10,93,3:. These calls for help and rescue and protection occur so frequently, that we feel forced to believe, that their protective powers and, implicitly, their supremacy over ill and evil, are some of the most characteristic traits of the concept of deva.

However, we come across the interesting passage 1,96,1: 8) devā agniṁ dhārayan, which Geldner renders: "die Götter erhalten Agni den Schätzespender". Agni is not the one who protects, but the person whom the devas protect and keep in being.

Another aspect of protecting the term amṛidh teaches us, cf. 1,89,3: 13,9: 3,58,7: 4,32,24: 45,4: 5,46,4: 9,86,18:. This term is translated by M. Williams, p. 108: "not doing harm, uninjured, unfatigued, pious, peaceable;" Though outwardly quite negative, one is able to discover some positive nuance, i.e. their inner nature and true being is peaceful and is not out harm; and so by inmost feeling they are against distress and evil.

Gonda translates in his Remarks on the Sanskrit Passive, p. 89, note 174, and Geldner in his 1st and 2nd edition as well.

In the present tense it has the meaning of "being busy" or "making active" or "instigating" or "urging on" etc. We meet this term often with ātaye, as well the verb av: "to help, to give assistance" cf. 1,31,8: 9: 35,10: 11: 36,13: 144,5: 4,1,20: 5,9,1: and 3,9,1:.

There are of course in use other expressions with the same sense, the gods are e.g. āmāḥ: "helping" and subhāvāsah "easy to invoke", cf. 4,19,1:.

In any case, this trait points out to us the kindheartedness of the deva on some occasions and also that the Vedic Indian felt dependent on them in order to surmount difficulties. In my opinion this very trait of dependence, or at least the indication of the same, teaches us some true godliness in the term deva.

Closely connected with those terms are words expressing the idea of: "favouring" like: no devā avasā gamānn... (RV. 1,89,7:) or kalyāṇa 1,31,9: cf. 2,23,19: vīsvam tad bhadrām yad avanti devāḥ...: "Everything is favouring us if the devas are with us." Here it is that Aeni plays a prominent part as a mediator.

However the term avag is not quite clear. In any case we learn that their favour is of paramount importance to man. The devas are in many ways the patrons of the human beings and we are quite dependent on them e.g. for wealth: cf. 1,159,1: 5: 91,1: 15,8: 3,11,9: 14,6: 54,21: 4,2,11: 6,64,4: 60,14: and also 5,50,5:.

For liberty we need them: cf. 1,59,5: 3,34,7: and also 7,98,3:.

For power and strength: cf. 1,74,9: 2,20,8: where the gods are said to grant strength and victory to Indra; cf. also 6,16,12:.

For glory: bhāgam deteṣu īravate, cf. 1,73,5:.

For fertility cf. 1,185,9: 190,8: 2,11,13: 3,4,9: They give cows, 1,169,8: . Something that shows the devas in higher regions of might and power, is that they grant us life, cf. 1,73,5: 4,36,3: (youth) and children, cf. 1,192,8: . They give life and happiness too, cf. 2,2,6: 5,50,5: 6,50,11:.

Yet, those summed up qualities may show their kind character, but it would be an exaggeration to imply the devas to be absolutely selfless. This truly divine trait, showing infinite love and total independence on everything, is quite unknown to them. Their kindness is only to be activated by grants and sacrifices from man's side. It is no more than a relation of: do ut possis dare; compare 1,26,8: svagnayo hi tūrya devāso dadhure ca nah. "So when the devas have received a good offering (fire) they grant us also our wishes. We believe that we those terms point to high morality, is still an open question to me. Relating to Indian ethics, McKenzie in his book: Hindu Ethics, Oxford, 1922, tells us that the moral features are far less prominent than the physical in the character of the Vedic Gods. However, one cannot say that they are immoral. Mitra-Varuna are the watchers of mankind, the sun is their eye, which reports the deeds of man. Nothing can happen without Varuna's knowledge or without his sanction. Even the Gods themselves follow his decree; cf. 8,41,7:.

Bloomfield in his Religion of the Veda (p. 126) goes too far in saying that Varuna, who is the lord of ṛta, finds in this ṛta a fairly complete system of ethics, a kind of counsel of perfection. Rather we may see ṛta as truth, says McKenzie, o.c. p. 8. Though Brhaspati holds up the law next to Varuna, he is a "guilt avenger" (2,23,17:) and with him all the Adityas. "We find (McKenzie writes) these and other gods besought to loosen their worshippers from sin and to forgive sin". RV. 1,185,8: gives a classification of sins, committed against the gods, our friends and our houses' chieftain. So RV. 5,85,7: relates: sins committed against the man who loves us, a brother, friend or comrade, the neighbour ever with us or a stranger. Lying is a sin against ṛta ("truth") and waters are used to remove from the worshipper the sin of lying and false oaths. Crimes of fraud and violence are condemned. Even hatred is sinful. Sin is sometimes regarded as disobedience of the commands of the gods, especially of Varuna, though also of Indra, Agni and other gods (cf. RV. 2,28,5: ff.) and this disobedience leads to anger on the part of the god and to punishments (cf. 2,29,5:). This punishment is seen as "a dark cave" narakasthānam (? 7,104,3:) and elsewhere death, so ascertains Mc Kenzie (o.c. p. 12).

However in the AV. another spirit is growing and though we still encounter some passages about Varuna as quoted above, the gods have almost completely lost their ethical traits. Even Varuna is fast losing his significance, and Mc Kenzie wrote: "No god is endorsed with the moral supremacy among the gods, which belonged to him" (o.c., p. 18—19) ¹⁰.

Sin was considered a magical substance (cf. Oldenberg, Religion des Veda, p. 317—318). So by charms sin is forgiven. One needs no free will to commit a sin; (cf. Mc Kenzie, o.c., p. 20) and further on the same author states: "Sin is regarded almost as something contagious, passed on from one being to another — even between men and devas." So sin grew to something quasi physical.

9. An often-used epithet is derived from the root tuj, e.g. RV. 1,11,5: tvām devā abibhyuṣat tujyamānāsa āṛiṇuḥ: "to thee the gods have rendered assistance, frightened of him who does not fear" So

Gonda translates in his Remarks on the Sanskrit Passive, p. 89, note 174, and Geldner in his 1st and 2nd edition as well.

In the present tense it has the meaning of "being busy" or "making active" or "instigating" or "urging on" etc. We meet this term often with ātaye, as well the verb av: "to help, to give assistance" cf. 1,31,8: 9: 35,10: 11: 36,13: 144,5: 4,1,20: 5,9,1: and 3,9,1:.

There are of course in use other expressions with the same sense, the gods are e.g. āmāh: "helping" and śubhāvāsah "easy to invoke", cf. 4,19,1:.

In any case, this trait points out to us the kindheartedness of the deva on some occasions and also that the Vedic Indian felt dependent on them in order to surmount difficulties. In my opinion this very trait of dependence, or at least the indication of the same, teaches us some true godliness in the term deva.

Closely connected with those terms are words expressing the idea of: "favouring" like: no devā avaiā gamann . . . (RV. 1,89,7:) or kalyāṇa 1,31,9: cf. 2,23,19: viśvaṃ tad bhadraṃ yad avanti devāḥ . . . : "Everything is favouring us if the devas are with us." Here it is that Agni plays a prominent part as a mediator. He makes friendship with the devas by praising and lauding them; cf. 3,3,1: devān . . . duvasyati; and in 3,3,7: he is called uṣig devānām: "intercessor with the devas". However the term uṣig is not quite clear. In any case we learn that their favour is of paramount importance to man. The devas are in many ways the patrons of the human beings and we are quite dependent on them e.g. for wealth: cf. 1,159,1: 5: 91,1: 15,8: 3,11,9: 14,6: 54,21: 4,2,11: 6,64,4: 60,14: and also 5,50,5:.

For liberty we need them: cf. 1,59,5: 3,34,7: and also 7,98,3:.

For power and strength: cf. 1,74,9: 2,20,8: where the gods are said to grant strength and victory to Indra; cf. also 6,16,12:.

For glory: bhūgaṃ devesu śratase, cf. 1,73,5:.

For fertility cf. 1,185,9: 190,8: 2,11,13: 3,4,9: They give cows, 1,169,8: . Something that shows the devas in higher regions of might and power, is that they grant us life, cf. 1,73,5: 4,36,3: (youth) and children, cf. 1,190,8: . They give life and happiness too, cf. 2,2,6: 5,50,5: 6,50,11:.

Yes, those summed up qualities may show their kind character, but it would be an exaggeration to imply the devas to be absolutely selfless. This truly divine trait, showing infinite love and total independence on everything, is quite unknown to them. Their kindness is only to be activated by grants and sacrifices from man's side. It is no more than a relation of: do ut possis dare; compare 1,26,8: svagnayo hi vīryaṃ devāso dadhre ca naḥ. "So when the devas have received a good offering (fire) they grant us also our wishes. We believe that we have a good offering"; cf. also 1,77,2: 83,2: 173,13: 5,42,3: 6,51,12: 68,6: 8: 7,17,7: 8,64,2: 10,132,1: 148,4: We meet this "do ut des" relation oftener in primitive society. So we may not call it too bad a name. This primitive man thinks of god according to his own ideas. Where he is out for things like wealth and health, where he is conscious that sacrifices ought to be offered to his gods, he easily gives evidence of the above mentioned mentality; cf. Bh. Gita 3,11: devān bhāvayatānena, te devā bhāvayantu vaś paraṣparam bhāvayantaḥ, śreyasḥ param avāpsyatha. „By this foster ye the gods and let the gods foster you. Thus fostering each other you shall attain to the supreme good" ²¹). The function of "to give" and "to receive" very often is based upon a relation of reciprocity.

11. The relationship of the devas and sacrifice.

It is a human custom to show one's submissiveness in the ritual token of sacrifice. The rendering of oneself, of one's daughters or sons, to the Māharājā, putting down one's pagri at the feet of the person offended or one's creditor, are even nowadays the very tokens of one's deepest dependence on the person concerned. Immediately we may draw the conclusion that by withdrawing some personal property from daily use, and to hand it over to some august personality, is no absolute proof for the divinity of the subject concerned. It is perhaps interesting to add that the creditor or māharājā or the offended person in such a case even nowadays is called: Deva = I found myself. However, if one relation is obvious, it is the connection between devas and offerings.

a) The devas have some contact with rites, and very often Agni is requested to carry the devas to the place of sacrifice, cf. 1,13,1: 2: 4: 14,12: 15,4: 5,11,2: 14,1: so other passages without number.

b) The devas themselves are time and again invited to the offerings to seat themselves upon the Barhis (sacrificial grass), to eat from the offerings and to drink the somadraught cf. 3,25,4: 5,51,3: devān upa hrāye cf. RV. 1,13,12: 44,4: 152,7: 186,1: ²²).

c) Sacrificial offerings belong to the devas: they are their food. cf. 4,15,2: 7,11,2: 1: 14,1: 10,70,2: 187,6: 11:.

d) The devas long for those offerings: cf. 1,12,4: 162,11: 187,6,11: 188,10: 2,37,6: 6,52,8: 7,82,7: etc.

e) They are invited to support the sacrifice: yajñeṣu ... śtate cf. 1,15,7: 3,8,8: 5,21,3: 4:.. On this support the complete outcome and results depend. Here we may again see an indication of the magic conception. Moreover the devas themselves ought to give assistance for the required result by looking for the precise and correct performance of the sacrificial act: cf. 1,18,8:1

f) The devas are the objects of offering: devān yaja: "honour the devas with sacrifices" can be met with throughout the entire RV. cf. 1,15,12: 20,8: 163,13: 162,21: 2,41,20: 3,14,5: 5,5,11: 6,71,6: Of course the devas have to accept the offerings cf. 1,139,11: devāso yajñam imam jayadhvam; They eat the gift offered: adanty āhutam cf. 1,94,3:.

g) In short: the devas are worthy to receive sacrifices, or as Geldner translates: "opferberechtigt". We meet the following terms: yajatra and yajata: cf. 1,186,11: 2,29,6: 3,57,5: 7,75,7: 10,64,14: 93,3: Vāl. 9,1: also yajñya cf. 1,16,2: ²³) and yajatha cf. 3,5,9:.

h) Another factor I could trace in some texts is that sacrifice has a power over the devas and they themselves are dependent on this sacrifice, and possibly this is the reason why sometimes the devas offer to sacrifice cf. 1,164,30: 10,90,16: 124,6: Geldner adds to 1,164,30: "Nach Sāyaṇa sind es die karmadevāḥ deren Erfolg auf Opfer usw. beruht, oder die Adityas und die Aṅgiras heißen die Sādhyagötter wofür er sich auf Ait. Br. 1,16,36—39: beruft." And Geldner renders himself I, p. 236: "Mit Opfer opferten die Götter dem Opfer. Dies waren die ersten Bräuche. Diese Mächte folgten in den Himmel nach, in dem die früheren Götter, die Sādhyas sich befinden."

i) At times one might almost believe, as we mentioned above, that the devas favour the sacrifice and are obedient to it; cf. 3,8,8: sajoṣato yajñam arantu: "They must (imperative form) favour the sacrifice unanimously". It seems that in sacrificial performances the devas are powers to join and to do what they are requested to!

j) The best among all kinds of offering appears to be the soma beverage cf. 9,67,28: and the invitations to somapiṭaye are really numberless cf. 3,25,4: and 5,31,3: This very soma is mentioned as a deva itself: deva deteṣu ābhagah; cf. 1,136,4: 7,21,1: 9,3,9: 6,7: 42,2: 99,7: 103,6.

k) The sacrificial post is called a god deva: vanaspate deva cf. 1,13,11: 142,11: and it is the post where the sacrificial animal has to be tied. The untying of the victim is a sort of sacrifice in itself and in 1,142,11: is said that the sacrificial post is offering itself. The horse as a victim is strengthened by the devas cf. 1,163,8: 9: Yet, the devas themselves have great respect for this horse: "die Götter kamen zu dem Opfermahl, der als erster das Rennpferd bestieg" (1,163,9:).

The Ghee, offered or yet to be offered, is presented to us as a maha deva cf. 4,58,3: So are the soma-pressing-stones: ubbā devāo divaśca gṛāśca rājñah cf. 5,38,3: And in 8,92,16: we hear the cow named as devi. M. Munster undertook special research on this topic of the holy have a good offering"; cf. also 1,77,2: 83,2: 173,13: 5,42,3: 6,51,12: 68,6: 8: 7,17,7: 8,64,2: 10,132,1: 148,4:. We meet this "do ut des" relation oftener in primitive society. So we may not call it too bad a name. This primitive man thinks of god according to his own ideas. Where he is out for things like wealth and health, where he is conscious that sacrifices ought to be offered to his gods, he easily gives evidence of the above mentioned mentality; cf. Bh. Gita 3,11: devān bhāṣayātānena, te devā bhāṣayantu vaḥ paraṣparam bhāṣayantaḥ, śreyasḥ param avāpsyatha. „By this foster ye the gods and let the gods foster you. Thus fostering each other you shall attain to the supreme good" ¹¹). The function of "to give" and "to receive" very often is based upon a relation of reciprocity.

11. The relationship of the devas and sacrifice.

It is a human custom to show one's submissiveness in the ritual token of sacrifice. The rendering of oneself, of one's daughters or sons, to the Māharājā, putting down one's pagri at the feet of the person offended or one's creditor, are even nowadays the very tokens of one's deepest dependence on the person concerned. Immediately we may draw the conclusion that by withdrawing some personal property from daily use, and to hand it over to some august personality, is no absolute proof for the divinity of the subject concerned. It is perhaps interesting to add that the creditor or māharājā or the offended person in such a case even nowadays is called: Devā as I found myself. However, if one relation is obvious, it is the connection between devas and offerings.

a) The devas have some contact with rites, and very often Agni is requested to carry the devas to the place of sacrifice, cf. 1,13,1: 2: 4: 14,12: 15,4: 5,11,2: 14,1: so other passages without number.

b) The devas themselves are time and again invited to the offerings to seat themselves upon the Barhis (sacrificial grass), to eat from the offerings and to drink the somadraught cf. 3,25,4: 5,51,3: devān upa hrāye cf. RV. 1,13,12: 44,4: 152,7: 186,1: ¹²).

c) Sacrificial offerings belong to the devas: they are their food. cf. 4,15,2: 7,11,2: 1: 14,1: 10,70,2: 187,6: 11:.

d) The devas long for those offerings: cf. 1,12,4: 162,11: 187,6,11: 188,10: 2,37,6: 6,52,8: 7,82,7: etc.

e) They are invited to support the sacrifice: yajñeṣu... īṣate cf. 1,15,7: 3,8,8: 5,21,3: 4:. On this support the complete outcome and results depend. Here we may again see an indication of the magic conception. Moreover the devas themselves ought to give assistance for the required result by looking for the precise and correct performance of the sacrificial act: cf. 1,18,8:!

f) The devas are the objects of offering: devān yaja: "honour the devas with sacrifices" can be met with throughout the entire RV. cf. 1,15,12: 20,8: 163,13: 162,21: 2,41,20: 3,14,5: 5,5,11: 6,71,6: Of course the devas have to accept the offerings cf. 1,139,11: devāso yajñam imam yajadbhram; They eat the gift offered: adanty āhutam cf. 1,94,3:

g) In short: the devas are worthy to receive sacrifices, or as Geldner translates: "opferberechtigt". We meet the following terms: yajatra and yajata: cf. 1,186,11: 2,29,6: 3,57,5: 7,75,7: 10,64,14: 93,3: Vāl. 9,1: also yajūya cf. 1,16,2:²³) and yajatha cf. 3,5,9:

h) Another factor I could trace in some texts is that sacrifice has a power over the devas and they themselves are dependent on this sacrifice, and possibly this is the reason why sometimes the devas offer to sacrifice cf. 1,164,50: 10,90,16: 124,6: Geldner adds to 1,164,50: "Nach Sāyana sind es die karmadevāḥ deren Erfolg auf Opfer usw. beruht, oder die Adityas und die Aṅgiras heißen die Sādhyagötter wofür er sich auf Ait. Br. 1,16,36—39: beruft." And Geldner renders himself I, p. 236: "Mit Opfer opferten die Götter dem Opfer. Dies waren die ersten Bräuche. Diese Mächte folgten in den Himmel nach, in dem die früheren Götter, die Sādhyas sich befinden."

i) At times one might almost believe, as we mentioned above, that the devas favour the sacrifice and are obedient to it; cf. 3,8,8: sajoṣaso yajñam atanti: "They must (imperative form) favour the sacrifice unanimously". It seems that in sacrificial performances the devas are powers to join and to do what they are requested to!

j) The best among all kinds of offering appears to be the soma beverage cf. 9,67,28: and the invitations to somaspīṭaye are really numberless cf. 3,25,4: and 5,51,3: This very soma is mentioned as a deva itself: deva devesu ābhagah; cf. 1,136,4: 7,21,1: 9,3,9: 6,7: 42,2: 99,7: 101,6.

k) The sacrificial post is called śula.

... śula post is offering itself. The horse as a victim is strengthened by the devas cf. 1,163,8: 9: . Yet, the devas themselves have great respect for this horse: "die Götter kamen zu dessen Opfermahl, der als erster das Renapferd bestieg" (1,163,9:).

The Ghee, offered or yet to be offered, is presented to us as a maha deva cf. 4,59,3: So are the soma-pressing-stones: ubhā devāso divasica grāśica rājatah cf. 5,38,3: And in 8,90,16: we hear the cow named aditi. M. Blussé undertook special research on this topic of the holy cow¹⁴⁾. We hear Indra mentioned as a bull, Uṣas as a cow¹⁵⁾ and the mother of cows as well. Also Aditi¹⁶⁾, Idā and Pr̥ṣni are thought of in the shape of a cow (o.c. p. 6). Interesting is the remark M. Mousses made (a.c. p. 15): "In de RV. was van heilichheid geen sprake, we vonden althans geen hymne, die aan een bepaalde vereerde godheid "koe" was gericht." (In RV. there is not a trace to be found of belief in the holiness of the cow. Anyhow we did not encounter any hymn, that was intended for a devī: "Cow"). And in short cf. 7,104,18: calls sacrifice itself a deva in general: deve adhyare. A short worthwhile remark is, that from the facts mentioned above it can be concluded, that various substances, even lifeless, can be named a deva. Lifeless at least in our ideas. It may be that the Vedic Indian regarded various "lifeless objects" as some embodiment of life itself and or as a manifestation of life's powers. So I dare not conclude that the Indian thought "any" lifeless objects a possible deva.

12. The devas are the objects of hymns and praises. And manifestly the Indians reveal their ideas that the devas found a pleasure in those praises; cf. 1,147,1: ubhe yat toke tanaye dadhānā ṛtasya rāman ranayanta devāḥ, and 2,41,18: speaks of juṣasva. They are also fond of the rites and offerings, cf. 3,6,7: and Agni is called the one who cheers the devas up, cf. 3,5,5:.

In short: offerings and hymns are a power over the devas, cf. 6,51,8: nama id ugram nama ā vivāse namo dādadhāra pṛthivīm uta dyām namo devabhya nama iṣa eṣām kṛtam cid eno namasā vivāse: "Die Anbetung (Geldner remarks: hier personifiziert) ist mächtig, die Anbetung Auch die

13. RV. 1,13,1: gives to a deva (i.e. Agni) the title of ṛṣi; cf. also 1,12,7: and elsewhere we read: 7,70,4: yogyā aśnavaithe ṛṣinām "ye strive after the practices of the ṛṣis." So 10,62,4: speaks of devaputras as ṛṣis. Elsewhere again we meet the title kavi with the names of devas, scarcely with deva as an apposition, cf. Agni 1,12,7: kaviṃ agnim upa stūhi, and 1,76,5: as well. Varuna is the kavitama deva (5,85,6:) and in 7,86,7: Varuṇa deva . . . kavītara.

Kavi and ṛṣi both indicate lofty and august personalities. They are human beings, but stand in a contemplative contact with the supernatural sphere; and caught by heavenly inspiration they utter god-inspired words. The authors give their ideas about the ṛṣi. So H. von Glasenapp¹⁷⁾ asserts that the ṛṣi "geschaut (wurde) von weltentrückten Heiligen, von ṛṣis welche in stiller Andacht göttlicher Erkenntnis teilhaftig wurden" and Gonda, in his Inleiding tot het Indische Denken²⁹): "to those ṛṣis came the revelation of the eternal truth; and the godhead by way of inspiration reveals the divine facts to the seer and puts into formulas the Truth Divine, without creating it." Masson Oursel³⁰), in Ancient India mentions the ṛṣis as the "mythical sages of prehistory" and (o.c. p. 129) relating to the ṛṣis he asserts: "to indicate exactly how far they have objectivity they are said to have been "seen" by the first inspired bards, who accordingly are called ṛṣis "the seers" of hymns". Oldenberg in *Religion des Veda*³¹) recalls that the ṛṣis are the ancestors of the great Brahmanic families. "They are priests and they have brought law and order to the creatures after they took their seats in the sky." Oldenberg further states that they themselves are no former devas or demons, but adding that "they are nothing like natural power".

Logically reasoning their epithet can not hold true of God, but only of a being inferior to God. Yet, as so many terms, it can be nothing more than a comparison, they could indicate here: "a sublime and exalted person pronouncing superhuman truths".

14. Number of the devas.

A few passages show us Indra as eka devaḥ: cf. 1,32,12: 52,14: 10,104,9: This eka deva must not be regarded as the "only one" with nobody next to him. But "Indra did it all by himself." So 3,46,2: names Indra: "Alleiniger König der ganzen Welt" cf. also 6,36,4: Also Agni receives the very same adjective, cf. 1,145,3: 3,1,10: 8,58,2: and Aditi 1,89,10: but here we see Aditi shown as the only principle from which everything has been evolved and emanated, and no enthusiasm may allow us to render eka deva as the "only God". "Unique" is quite sufficient. For expressing that the deva is doing something all alone by himself, this is the only way of expression. Too often there are utterances about janma and *viśo devānām*³²) for this expression to force us to accept an absconded monotheism or even a rudiment of the latter. Elsewhere we often observe that the devas are eleven in number, cf. 1,34,11: 139,11: and 3,6,9: And again we meet the number 3339, cf. RV. 3,9,9: Often the RV. speaks about the viśve devāḥ, over the gṛṇa of the Maruts.

15. Order among the devas.

One can clearly discern a sort of order among the devas in RV. All devas do not have the same rank. In age seems to be ad abhiśekhya nama ya lakṣmāna mā jyāya

viśve devāḥ: Geldner translates:
 "Verehrung vor den Großen, Verehrung vor den Kleinen. Verehrung vor den Jungen, Verehrungen vor den Betagten. Wir wollen die Götter verehren, wenn wir es vermögen. Nicht will ich die Rede eines cow²⁴). We hear Indra mentioned as a bull, Uṣas as a cow²⁵) and the mother of cows as well. Also Aditi²⁶), Idā and Pr̥ṣni are thought of in the shape of a cow (o.c. p. 6). Interesting is the remark M. Muusses made (o.c. p. 15): "In de RV. was van heiligheid geen sprake, we vonden althans geen hymne, die aan een bepaalde vereerde godheid "koe" was gericht." (In RV. there is not a trace to be found of belief in the holiness of the cow. Anyhow we did not encounter any hymn, that was intended for a devī: "Cow"). And in short cf. 7,104,18: calls sacrifice itself a deva in general: deve adhware. A short worthwhile remark is, that from the facts mentioned above it can be concluded, that various substances, even lifeless, can be named a deva. Lifeless at least in our ideas. It may be that the Vedic Indian regarded various "lifeless objects" as some embodiment of life itself and or as a manifestation of life's powers. So I dare not conclude that the Indian thought "any" lifeless objects a possible deva.

12. The devas are the objects of hymns and praises. And manifestly the Indians reveal their ideas that the devas found a pleasure in those praises; cf. 1,147,1: ubhe yat toke tanaye dadhānā ṛtasya sūman raṇayanta devāḥ, and 2,41,18: speaks of juṣasva. They are also fond of the rites and offerings, cf. 3,6,7: and Agni is called the one who cheers the devas up, cf. 3,5,5:.

In short: offerings and hymns are a power over the devas, cf. 6,51,8: nama id ugraṃ nama ā vivāse namo dādihāra pṛthivīm uta dyaṃ namo devabhyaḥ nama īśa ṛtām kṛtam cid eno namatā vivāse: "Die Anbetung (Geldner remarks: hier personifiziert) ist mächtig, die Anbetung bitte ich her. Die Anbetung erhält Erde und Himmel. Anbetung gebührt den Göttern, die Anbetung hat über sie Macht. Auch die getane Sünde bitte ich durch Anbetung ab."

13. RV. 1,13,1: gives to a deva (i.e. Agni) the title of ṛṣi; cf. also 1,12,7: and elsewhere we read: 7,70,4: yogā ānavaithe ṛṣiṇām "ye strive after the practices of the ṛṣis." So 10,62,4: speaks of devaputras as ṛṣis. Elsewhere again we meet the title kavi with the names of devas, scarcely with deva as an apposition, cf. Agni 1,12,7: kaviṃ agnim ūpa stūhi, and 1,76,5: as well. Varuṇa is the kavitama deva (5,85,6:) and in 7,86,7: Varuṇa deva . . . kavitara.

Kavi and ṛṣi both indicate lofty and august personalities. They are human beings, but stand in a contemplative contact with the supernatural sphere; and caught by heavenly inspiration they utter god-inspired words. The authors give their ideas about the ṛṣis. So H. von Glasenapp²⁷) asserts that the ṛṣi "geschaut (wurde) von weltentrückten Heiligen, von ṛṣis welche in stiller Andacht göttlicher Erkenntnis teilhaftig wurden" and Gonda, in his Inleiding tot het Indische Denken²³): "to those ṛsis came the revelation of the eternal truth; and the godhead by way of inspiration reveals the divine facts to the seer and puts into formulas the Truth Divine, without creating it." Masson Ouriel²⁴), in Ancient India mentions the ṛsis as the "mythical sages of prehistory" and (o.c. p. 129) relating to the ṛṣi he asserts: "to indicate exactly how far they have objectivity they are said to have been "seen" by the first inspired bards, who accordingly are called ṛsis "the seers" of hymns". Oldenberg in Religion des Veda²⁵) recalls that the ṛsis are the ancestors of the great Brahmanic families. "They are priests and they have brought law and order to the creatures after they took their seats in the sky." Oldenberg further states that they themselves are no former devas or demons, but adding that "they are nothing like natural power".

Logically reasoning their epithet can not hold true of God, but only of a being inferior to God. Yet, as so many terms, it can be nothing more than a comparison, they could indicate here: "a sublime and exalted person pronouncing superhuman truths".

14. Number of the devas.

A few passages show us Indra as eko devaḥ: cf. 1,32,12; 52,14; 10,104,9. This eka deva must not be regarded as the "only one" with nobody next to him. But "Indra did it all by himself." So 3,46,2: names Indra: "Alleiniger König der ganzen Welt" cf. also 6,36,4. Also Agni receives the very same adjective, cf. 1,145,3; 3,1,10; 8,58,2; and Aditi 1,89,10: but here we see Aditi shown as the only principle from which everything has been evolved and emanated, and no enthusiasm may allow us to render eka deva as the "only God". "Unique" is quite sufficient. For expressing that the deva is doing something all alone by himself, this is the only way of expression. Too often there are utterances about janma and *viśo devānām*²⁶) for this expression to force us to accept an absconded monotheism or even a rudiment of the latter. Elsewhere we often observe that the devas are eleven in number, cf. 1,34,11; 139,11; and 3,6,9. And again we meet the number 3339, cf. RV. 3,9,9. Often the RV. speaks about the trīṣe devāḥ, over the gana of the Maruts.

15. Order among the devas.

One can clearly discern a sort of order among the devas in RV. All devas do not have the same position cf. 1,27,13: where disparity in age seems to be admitted among them. Namo mahadbhyo, namo arbhatebhyo namo yuvabhyo nama ālinebhyah. Yajāma devān yadi istakṛtāma mā jyāyasaḥ saṁsam ā rkyi devāḥ: Geldner translates: "Verneigung vor den Großen. Verneigung vor den Kleinen. Verneigung vor den Jungen, Verneigungen vor den Betagten. Wir wollen die Götter verehren, wenn wir es vermögen. Nicht will ich die Rede eines cow¹⁴). We hear Indra mentioned as a bull, Uṣas as a cow¹⁵) and the mother of cows as well. Also Aditi¹⁶), Idā and Pr̥ṣni are thought of in the shape of a cow (o.c. p. 6). Interesting is the remark M. Muusses made (o.c. p. 15): "In de RV. was van heiligheid geen sprake, we vonden althans geen hymne, die aan een bepaalde vereerde godheid "koe" was gericht." (In RV. there is not a trace to be found of belief in the holiness of the cow. Anyhow we did not encounter any hymn, that was intended for a devī: "Cow"). And in short cf. 7,104,18: calls sacrifice itself a deva in general: deva adhvare. A short worthwhile remark is, that from the facts mentioned above it can be concluded, that various substances, even lifeless, can be named a deva. Lifeless at least in our ideas. It may be that the Vedic Indian regarded various "lifeless objects" as some embodiment of life itself and or as a manifestation of life's powers. So I dare not conclude that the Indian thought "any" lifeless objects a possible deva.

12. The devas are the objects of hymns and praises. And manifestly the Indians reveal their ideas that the devas found a pleasure in those praises; cf. 1,147,1: ubhe yat toke tanaye dadhānā ṛtāya sāmānaṇayanta devāḥ, and 2,41,18: speaks of juṣṣava. They are also fond of the rites and offerings, cf. 3,6,7: and Agni is called the one who cheers the devas up, cf. 3,5,5:.

In short: offerings and hymns are a power over the devas, cf. 6,51,8: nama id ugraṃ nama ā vivāse namo dādāra pṛthivīm uta dyām namo devabhyaṃ nama ita eṣām kṛtāṃ cid eno namasā vivāse: "Die Anbetung (Geldner remarks: hier personifiziert) ist mächtig, die Anbetung bitte ich her. Die Anbetung erhält Erde und Himmel, Anbetung gebührt den Göttern, die Anbetung hat über sie Macht, Auch die getane Sünde bitte ich durch Anbetung ab."

13. RV. 1,13,1: gives to a deva (i.e. Agni) the title of ṛṣi; cf. also 1,12,7: and elsewhere we read: 7,70,4: yogyā anavaithe ṛṣinām "ye strive after the practices of the ṛṣi." So 10,62,4: speaks of devaputras as ṛṣi. Elsewhere again we meet the title kavi with the names of devas, scarcely with deva as an apposition, cf. Agni 1,12,7: kavim agnim uṣa stūhi, and 1,76,5: as well. Varuṇa is the kavitama deva (5,85,6:) and in 7,86,7: Varuṇa deva . . . kavitarā.

Kavi and ṛṣi both indicate lofty and august personalities. They are human beings, but stand in a contemplative contact with the supernatural sphere; and caught by heavenly inspiration they utter god-inspired words. The authors give their ideas about the ṛṣi. So H. von Glasenapp¹⁷) asserts that the ṛṣi "geschaut (wurde) von weltentrückten Heiligen, von *ṛṣi*s welche in stiller Andacht göttlicher Erkenntnis teilhaftig wurden" and Gonda, in his Inleiding tot het

Indische Denken¹⁹⁾: "to those ṛsis came the revelation of the eternal truth; and the godhead by way of inspiration reveals the divine facts to the seer and puts into formulas the Truth Divine, without creating it." Masson Ouriel²⁰⁾, in Ancient India mentions the ṛsis as the "mythical sages of prehistory" and (o.c. p. 129) relating to the ṛuti he asserts: "to indicate exactly how far they have objectivity they are said to have been "seen" by the first inspired bards, who accordingly are called ṛsis "the seers" of hymns". Oldenberg in *Religion des Veda*²¹⁾ recalls that the ṛsis are the ancestors of the great Brahmanic families. "They are priests and they have brought law and order to the creatures after they took their seats in the sky." Oldenberg further states that they themselves are no former devas or demons, but adding that "they are nothing like natural power".

Logically reasoning their epithet can not hold true of God, but only of a being inferior to God. Yet, as so many terms, it can be nothing more than a comparison, they could indicate here: "a sublime and exalted person pronouncing superhuman truths".

14. Number of the devas.

A few passages show us Indra as eko devaḥ: cf. 1,32,12; 32,14; 10,104,9: This eka deva must not be regarded as the "only one" with nobody next to him. But "Indra did it all by himself." So 3,46,2: names Indra: "Alleiniger König der ganzen Welt" cf. also 6,36,4: Also Agni receives the very same adjective, cf. 1,145,3; 3,1,10; 8,58,2; and Aditi 1,89,10: but here we see Aditi shown as the only principle from which everything has been evolved and emanated, and no enthusiasm may allow us to render eka deva as the "only God". "Unique" is quite sufficient. For expressing that the deva is doing something all alone by himself, this is the only way of expression. Too often there are utterances about jatma and *viśo devānām*²²⁾ for this expression to force us to accept an absconded monotheism or even a rudiment of the latter. Elsewhere we often observe that the devas are eleven in number. again we meet: about the viśve

15. Order among the devas.

One can clearly discern a sort of order among the devas in RV. All devas do not have the same position cf. 1,27,13: where disparity in age seems to be admitted among them. Namo mahadbhyaḥ, namo arbhakebhyo namo yuvabhyo namo āśinebhyah. Yajāma devān yadi śakṇatāma mā jyāyasaḥ śaṁsam ā vṛkṣi devāḥ: Geldner translates: "Verneigung vor den Großen. Verneigung vor den Kleinen. Verneigung vor den Jungen, Verneigungen vor den Betagten. Wir wollen die Götter verehren, wenn wir es vermögen. Nicht will ich die Rede eines Höheren vorwegnehmen, ihr Götter." In 5,26,1: Agni is the one who has to bring the devas to the place of sacrifice. Does this imply, that in one way or the other a lower grade for Agni had been reserved? However, it is rather difficult to report correctly the several concepts in this matter.

a) Generally speaking we notice Indra being praised and magnified by the other devas as their hero, their champion, but this does not imply that he is their chieftain cf. 1,52,15: devāso amadann anu tvā cf. also 1,102,1 and 103,7. But certainly it does imply that he is superior to them.

b) Indra is named the highest: na tvāvān anyo astīndra, devo na martyo jyāyān cf. 6,30,4: and also 3,46,3: 4,30,1: 3:.

c) But he has not received this prerogative quite alone 1,131,1: suggest devāso dadhire purah: "the devas appointed him as their chief." 2,13,5: even suggest that they had begot him adhākṛṇoh pṛthivīm samdr̥śe dive yo dbautinām abihann ārinak pathah: tam tvā stomebhīr udabhir na vājinam devam devā ajanant sāry ukthyah; cf. Geldner: "Dann lieszest du die Erde den Himmel schauen, der du, o Drachentöter, die Bahnen der Flüsse freimachtest. Dich den Gott haben die Götter mit Lobliedern wie ein Rennpferd mit Wasser neugeboren. Darum bist du preisenswert". Geldner however in his 2nd edition gives this translation for ajanant; the first edition renders "ermuntert". After "neugeboren" he puts a question mark, and in a note he suggests: ajanan paszt nicht recht: ob ajunan (jū) "regten an"?

d) His huge and prominent power, ranging above everything, Indra received from the devas cf. 1,80,15: nabhi nu yād adbhiman-īndram ko vīryā parah. tasmun nṛmṇam uta kratum devā ojāṃṣi sam dadhur arcann, anu svarājyam, which Geldner renders: "Denn niemals soweit wir gedenken war einer an Manneskraft höher als Indra. In ihm haben die Götter Mannesmut und Einsicht und alle Kräfte vereinigt. Sie sollen in deine Selbstherrlichkeit einstimmen"; cf. also 6,20,2: 25,8:.

e) Human beings worship Indra as the deveṣu prathamam (1,102,9:). That is why the first draught of Soma has been reserved for him (1,135,1:) and he is named Somo deveṣu (id. 2); this is something very sublime according to Indian ideas.

f) The devas are good friends of Indra.

Cf. 3,47,3: Indra has been appointed as their chief by them (1,131,1), but at the same time (1,68,2:) it is reported: pari yad eṣām eko viśvesām bhuvad devo devānām mahiteṣā: "that he (Indra) alone surpasses by his majesty all the devas, he the deva". However, RV.

says the same of Agni, yet in a different wording: 5,25,4: Agnir deveṣu rājati . . . mariteṣu: "Agni governs devas and mortals". Agni is called prathama . . . amṛtānām: "the first of immortals". cf. 1,24,2; and 10,70,2: presents Agni as a priest and at the very same time: devatamah: "one who is deva at its utmost". We hear the same mentioned about Bṛhaspati in 2,24,3: devānām devatamāya. The one who reveres him, is the favourite of the devas. cf. 2,25,5: Mitra and Varuṇa have received the prerogative of devā deveṣu praśastā: "both these devas are respected by the devas." (5,68,2:3;) and 3rd stanza: "great is their power among the devas". And 6,67,10: tells us that they do not discuss might and power with the devas implicitly: they are far superior to them. The combination Indra-Varuṇa is named as exalted above all other devas (6,68,4;) and 5,67,1: says about Mitra-Varuṇa: varṣiṣṭham kṣatram ātāhe: "you reached the highest point of authority". The entire 67th sūkta of maṇḍala 5 gives evidence of this. Occasionally Soma is praised as pari devebhyas cf. 9,42,2: 65,2: and also 6,48,19: where we hear Pūṣan adored as paro hi martyair aśi samo devaḥ. Yet, in 6,58,4: it does appear that the other devas have control over Pūṣan: devāso adaduh sūryāyai: "Er (Pūṣan) den die Götter der Sūryā gegeben haben."

Atkin's book *Pūṣan in the Rig Veda*²³⁾ gives a detailed description of Pūṣan. It is worth quoting: "Originally he (Pūṣan) seems to have been the solar deity of a pastoral people, consequently a deity with pastoral characteristics and functions of a god of paths, all inherent in his nature and developing more or less contemporaneously". He adds some secondary traits as "guiding the souls to heaven", "guide for the marriage rites and distributor of wealth". Finally, 9,100,6: makes a discrimination between Indra-Viṣṇu and the other devas.

16. Amṛtya and the like are the next epithets frequently used in connexion with the devas.

First: the meaning of this concept. P. Thieme published a paper about it²⁴⁾. He expounds the linguistic relations of amṛta (n.) as "Leben, Lebenskraft" rather than "Unsterblichkeit" i.e. Life, Vitality, rather than Immortality, as the Greek ambrosios and ambrosion (o.c., p. 52). He quotes RV. 1,23,19: apsu antar amṛtam apsu bbeṣajam: "in the water is vitality, in the waters is healing Power". Yet, his paper does not explain the subject as well as Prof. Gonda: "amṛta is not in the hands or the power of death; possessing vitality and this in a special or uncommon quantity!"²⁵⁾ Thieme (o.c., p. 24) renders amṛta as "Lebenskraft spendend", cf. RV. 9,74,6: haviḥ . . . amṛtam "Lebenskraft spendende Opferspeise" and vyotir amṛtam is "Lebenskraft spendendes Licht" (7,76,1:). One could almost believe that he proves this rendering best in 1,159,2: suretasā pitarā bhūma cakratur urn prajāyā amṛtam varimabbhiḥ. "Die Eltern von gutem Samen machten die Erde breit zur Fortzeugung, Lebenskraft spendend mittels ihrer Breite." On p. 26 of the same work, he proposes to render amṛtatva with "Nicht-tot-sein, Leben" cf. 10,107,2: Amṛtatvam bhajante . . . pra tiranta āyuh: "Sie haben Teil am Leben . . . sie setzten (glücklich) über die Lebenszeit hinweg" and he ascertains p. 29 that Vedic amṛta n. is "Lebenskraft", amṛta is "Lebenskraft spendend" and amṛtatva "Lebenskraft". They relate themselves to quite natural subjects. Yet, because of their healing effects they are ascribed to heavenly sources. His examples are quite convincing in my opinion: goṣu priyam amṛtam (RV. 1,71,9:) milk is called: the "kind vitality in the cows", so 6,37,3: of the wind; 7,76,1: of light; 5,63,2: of rain, and in 1,23,19: 10,107,2: the pious share in natural vitality. But where amṛta or amṛtatva will be translated either by "immortal" (which also means "not in the power of death") or "vital", none is exclusively of the devas. Praising the devas as amṛta, it does not mean that they are qualified as divine in sensu stricto.

We find this concept joined to the devas cf. 1,58,1: and also 2,1,14:, as well as with certain names of devas, e.g. with Agni 1,44,1: 3,27,7: 29,13: 20,3: 4,3,3: 5,18,1: 2: 14,1: 2: 10,21,4: to heaven-and-earth 1,185,6: to Indra 1,129,10: to Pūṣan 8,4,18:.

We state another nuance where it is mentioned: martyeṣu amṛta cf. 1,77,1: 4,1,1: 2,1:. It might be a hyperbolic expression: kathā dāṣemāgnaye, kāsmai devajūṣocyate bhāmīne gīḥ; yo martyeṣu amṛta ṛtāvā hotā yajīṣtha it kṛṇoti devān: "wie sollen wir dem Agni opfern, welche Lobrede wird dem Strahlenden als gottgefällig vorgetragen? Der, der Unsterbliche unter den Sterblichen als rechtmäßiger, best-opfernder Host die Götter gewinnt" (1,77,1: cf. also 3,20,3:).

This amṛtatva is considered an acquired quality for the devas cf. 4,35,8: 36,4: and Indra is according to 6,44,15: the prominent drinker of the Soma. Moreover soma and amṛta are like synonyms, and the amṛta becomes the draught of immortality i.e. vitality. During my own research, while looking through narrowly those passages, there arose the problem whether deva amṛta is to be rendered as "immortal deva"; I surmised that the true contents had a more analogical meaning: "having a greater vitality than the mortals". Especially as it has been applied so freely that one has to consider it in a freer sense e.g. 1,30,18: rathas . . . amṛtyah . . . cf. also 5,75,9:.

17. Asura as an epithet to the devas.

Grassmann, who though of the 19th century, is still of some historical value, gives the following analysis of the concept of asura in his Dict. on RV. p. 155: "a. lebendig, regsam; aber nur vom körperlosen, geistigen Leben gebraucht und häufig mit Bezeichnungen der Weisheit (pracetā) verbunden. Also 1) geistig lebendig und in substantivischem Sinne: Geist, Gott, von Göttern überhaupt. 2) von einzelnen Göttern.

Götter und besonders die Aditya's erscheinen. 4) himmlisch, göttlich, von dem Gebetsrufe, der zum Himmel dringt, schmeichelnd, von den Opfergebern, die die Sänger reich beschenkten, vom Geiste des gestorbenen Vaters. 5) Bezeichnung eines obersten bösen Geistes als dessen Mannen (virās) die Dämonen erscheinen. 6) Bezeichnung böser Geister überhaupt." Monier Williams o.c. p. 106: Ved. living, alive, spiritual; an epithet of the Supreme Spirit; Varuṇa; incorporeal, superhuman, divine; m. Spirit, an incorporeal being of an evil kind; an evil spirit, a demon, a ghost or spectre etc.". Siehoupak, Nitti and Benou in their dictionary: "mauvais esprit, ennemi des dieux, démon, pl.n. d'une classe de démons; Rāhu."

The first two authors think asura as a term for "something strictly spiritual"; an indication of God in sensu stricto. 1,24,14: presents King Varuṇa to us as: "einsichtsvoller Asura" (Geldner). Thus of Savitar 1,35,10: Asura with a golden hand; cf. also 1,151,4: 2,27,10: 28,7:. So Geldner certainly does not give any precise rendering of asura. It is a pity that Lüders did not devote a chapter or at least a paragraph to this term in his book: Varuṇa I. We see 2,27,4: that the Adityas preserve their asura-dignity, and in the same stanza we come across the fact that the Adityas are called devas and asuras as well. And stanza 10: tvam viśveṣāṃ varuṇāsi rājā ye ca devā asura ye ca maruṭāḥ. Which Geldner renders: "Du, Varuṇa, bist König über alle: über Götter, ■ Asura, und die Sterblichen." Asura as epithet to deva occurs unfrequently e.g. 3,55,1: (devānām asuratvam.) This certainly points out that the Vedic Indian considered the asura - 1.

... des göttlichen Waltens werden in allerlei seltsame Allegorien und Paradoxen gekleidet. Die Gottheit selbst muß erraten werden". 7,65,2: shows to us Mitra Varuṇa as both asura and the lords of the devas. Asura seems to be superior to deva. 8,25,4: expresses that Mitra-Varuṇa are devas and asuras: devāṃ asurā itānāv itam ā ghoṣato bīhat. And 10,82,5: searching for the principle of the Universe "was jenseits des Himmels, noch jenseits der Erde, jenseits der Götter (devebbis), des Asura's ist, was war das denn was das Wasser als ersten Keim empfing worin alle Götter (devāḥ) miteingerechnet waren." Here asura and deva are cakratur uru prajāyā amṛtam varimabbhiḥ. "Die Eltern von gutem Samen machten die Erde breit zur Fortzeugung, Lebenskraft spendend mittels ihrer Breite." On p. 26 of the same work, he proposes to render amṛtatva with "Nicht-tot-sein, Leben" cf. 10,107,2: Amṛtatvam bhajante . . . pra tiranta āyuh: "Sie haben Teil am Leben . . . sie setzten (glücklich) über die Lebenszeit hinweg" and he ascertains p. 29 that Vedic amṛta n. is "Lebenskraft", amṛta is "Lebenskraft spendend" and amṛtatva "Lebenskraft". They relate themselves to quite natural subjects. Yet, because of their healing effects they are ascribed to heavenly sources. His examples are quite convincing in my opinion: goṣu priyam amṛtam (RV. 1,71,9:) milk is called: the "kind vitality in the cows", so 6,37,3: of the wind; 7,76,1: of light; 5,63,2: of rain, and in 1,23,19: 10,107,2: the pious share in natural vitality. But where amṛta or amṛtatva will be translated either by "immortal" (which also means "not in the power of death") or "vital", none is exclusively of the devas. Praising the devas as amṛta, it does not mean that they are qualified as divine in sensu stricto.

We find this concept joined to the devas cf. 1,58,1: and also 2,1,14:, as well as with certain names of devas, e.g. with Agni 1,44,1: 3,27,7: 29,13: 20,3: 4,3,3: 5,18,1: 2: 14,1: 2: 10,21,4: to heaven-and-earth 1,185,6: to Indra 1,129,10: to Pūṣan 8,4,18:.

We state another nuance where it is mentioned: martyeṣu amṛta cf. 1,77,1: 4,1,1: 2,1:. It might be a hyperbolic expression: kathā dāśemāgnaye, kāsmā devajusṭocyate bhāmine giḥ; yo martyeṣu amṛta ṛtāvā hotā yajisṭha it kṛnoti devān: "wie sollen wir dem Agni opfern, welche Lobrede wird dem Strahlenden als gottgefällig vorgetragen? Der, der Unsterbliche unter den Sterblichen als rechtmässiger, bestopfernder Hotṛ die Götter gewinnt" (1,77,1: cf. also 3,20,3:).

This amṛtatva is considered an acquired quality for the devas cf. 4,35,8: 36,4: and Indra is according to 6,44,15: the prominent drinker of the Soma. Moreover soma and amṛta are like synonyms, and the amṛta becomes the draught of immortality i.e. vitality. During my own research, while looking through narrowly those passages, there arose the problem whether deva amṛta is to be rendered as "immortal deva"; I surmised that the true contents had a more analogical meaning: "having a greater vitality than the mortals". Especially as it has been applied so freely that one has to consider it in a freer sense e.g. 1,30,18: rathas . . . amṛtyaḥ . . . cf. also 5,75,9:.

17. Asura as an epithet to the devas.

Grassmann, who though of the 19th century, is still of some historical value, gives the following analysis of the concept of asura in his Dict. on RV. p. 155: "a. lebendig, regsam; aber nur vom körperlosen, power, it surely indicates that the element of light belongs to asurata cf. 5,85,2. It is quite important that Varuṇa is so often connected with creative power and creation, māyā (which Geldner translates as "Kunststück". We shall have to return to it) and that light usually is connected with Dyaus, Aditi, Agni, Savitr. (Sometimes also with Soma, Rudra, Pūṣan) and that creation and light seem again to be related to the personality Dyaus-pitar, who has the title of asura as well. We could come near this problem also from another side. In 8,25,1: one feels that deva is inferior to Mitra-Varuṇa, asura par excellence. And 8,25,4: shows deva as one out of a great number of titles given to Mitra-Varuṇa. In the 10th mandala 85,17: we find devabhyah beside Sūrya, Mitra-Varuṇa and in 110,4: side by side with are clearly separated from them.

18. The Vrata devānām.

Monier-Williams circumscribes vrata as: "realm, sphere, sway (Ved.); rite, observance, practice; any religious act or obligation, enjoined by the gods; a sacrifice; a self-chosen voluntary act, any meritorious act of devotion or austerity, fasting, continence, vowed observance, vow." (o.c., p. 984).

And Stchoupak, Nirrti, Renou (o.c. p. 711) "règle, observance, conduite, manière d'être: vocu (qu'on prononce), devoir religieux, pratique religieuse, chasteté."

Grassmann (o.c. p. 1361) translates: „1) der göttliche Wille, die göttliche Ordnung, Gesetz, Gebot," and Geldner in his translation of the RV. accepts this rendering by Grassmann. So we may say about the vrata devānām:

1) that they are sometimes to be regarded as law: cf. Geldner "das hohe Gesetz" 1,75,5: and also 3,56,1: 7,76,5; ("Gebote") 10,2,4 ("Gebote") 10,33,9: ("Gesetze") and Geldner renders vrata in 3,55,1: with "der Dienst" (the service). They are called dhruva: "solidly grounded, unshakable".

2) They are made by the devas themselves: viśva ... vrataḥ dhruvā yāni devā akṛvata, cf. 1,36,5:.

3) The devas keep an eye on their observance: they keep watch over their regulations and orders (cf. 1,31,2:). Agni guards them: (Agni) devānām pari bhūṣati vrataṁ cf. also 1,36,5: where Agni contains every law and rule given by the devas. And in 1,22,19: Viṣṇu receives the title of "guardian of the vrata".

opposites, like heaven and earth. And the passage 10,55,4: says Uṣas to be the giver of light, the only great asura power she has. Would that indicate that we have to render asuratva as "creative power"? 10,99,2: Indra is seated on the throne with "seiner Asura-würde".

There is an essential difference between deva and asura and it proves itself in 7,66,2: where Mitra-Varuṇa are said to have destined the devas to the dignity of asura. Asuratva is superior to deva.

Elsewhere 5,42,1: mentions Varuṇa, Bhāga, Aditi as asura but does not say a word about their deva-hood. 5,42,11: we hear Rudra being praised as devam asuram. 2,27,4: states the devas as provided with asuryam: devā . . . rakṣamānā asuryam, but st. 10 lauded Varuṇa the great as the Ruler over everything, devas included: tvam vīṣṭvām varuṇāsi rājā ye ca devā asura ye ca martāḥ lataṃ no rāstra śarado vicakṣe śyāmāyūṃsi sudhitāni pūrvā. "Varuṇa, thou art king over all, even over the devas, O asura, and over the mortals as well. Grant us a hundred autumns . . . and may we reach the former . . . age." The context shows us Varuṇa as Universal Ruler, moreover he has power over Life. He is able to lengthen the same. And so it may indicate his creative power. 8,101,12: shows us Sūrya as the great preeminent one: mahnā devānām asuryaḥ purohito vibhu jyotir adābhyam. Indra in 6,36,1: yad deveṣu dhārayathā asuryam: "who thou wert appointed to asura-ship among the devas". P. von Bradke in Dyaus Asura, Ahura etc., p. 29 notices that it might be rendered as: "pouvoir suprême, souveraineté universelle" and he remarks quite interestingly that asura occurs 72 times in the singular, but only thrice in dual, and 10 times in plural (cf. o.c., p. 19). Again 4,42,2: presents Varuṇa saying: aham rājā varuṇo mahyam tāny asurāṃ prathamā dhārayanta, kratum śacante varuṇasya devā rājāmi kṛṣṭer upamasya vītrech. "Ich Varuṇa bin der König, mir waren zuerst die Asurawürden bestimmt. Des Varuṇa Rat befolgen die Götter, ich herrsche über das Volk von höchster Körperform", (Geldner) and P. von Bradke renders: "für mich halten (die devas) jene uralten Attribute des höchsten Herrschers aufrecht". Certainly von Bradke considers the title of asura as a description of the one true God. Hopkins' criticism in Religions of India ²³) says: "Von Bradke's attempt has failed signally". My own opinion is that von Bradke's conclusion is more his pious wish than a proved thesis. But reading Hopkins' book one is struck by his deadly fear for any sign of monotheism, and I believe, all be it unwillingly, that he does not like to admit the idea of one true God in the RV.

Concluding one feels tempted to consider asura and asuratva as superior to deva; since there is presumably some relation to creative power, it surely indicates that the element of light belongs to asura cf. 5,85;. It is quite important that Varuṇa is so often connected with creative power and creation, māyā (which Geldner translates as "Kunststück". We shall have to return to it) and that light usually is connected with Dyaus, Aditi, Agni, Savitr. (Sometimes also with Soma, Rudra, Pūṣan) and that creation and light seem again to be related to the personality Dyauspitar, who has the title of asura as well. We could come near this problem also from another side. In 8,25,1: one feels that deva is inferior to Mitra-Varuṇa, asura par excellence. And 8,25,4: shows deva as one out of a great number of titles given to Mitra-Varuṇa. In the 10th maṇḍala 85,17: we find devabhyaḥ beside Sūrya, Mitra-Varuṇa and in 110,4: side by side with asura and deva. The deva and asura are clearly separated from them.

18. The Vrata devānām.

Monier-Williams circumscribes vrata as: "realm, sphere, sway (Ved.); rite, observance, practice; any religious act or obligation, enjoined by the gods; a sacrifice; a self-chosen voluntary act, any meritorious act of devotion or austerity, fasting, continence, vowed observance, vow." (o.c., p. 984).

And Stchoupak, Nitri, Renou (o.c. p. 711) "règle, observance, conduite, manière d'être: vœu (qu'on prononce), devoir religieux, pratique religieuse, chasteté."

Grassmann (o.c. p. 1361) translates: „1) der göttliche Wille, die göttliche Ordnung, Gesetz, Gebot," and Geldner in his translation of the RV. accepts this rendering by Grassmann. So we may say about the vrata devānām:

1) that they are sometimes to be regarded as law: cf. Geldner "das hohe Gesetz" 1,75,5: and also 3,56,1: 7,76,5; ("Gebote") 10,2,4 ("Gebote") 10,33,9: ("Gesetze") and Geldner renders vrata in 3,55,1: with "der Dienst" (the service). They are called dhruva: "solidly grounded, unshakable".

2) They are made by the devas themselves: viśva . . . vratā dhruvā yāni devā akr̥vata, cf. 1,36,5:.

3) The devas keep an eye on their observance: they keep watch over their regulations and orders (cf. 1,31,2:). Agni guards them: (Agni) devānām paṇi bhūṣasi vratam cf. also 1,36,5: where Agni contains every law and rule given by the devas. And in 1,22,19: Viṣṇu receives the title of "guardian of the vrata".

4) Especially the Adityas have a close relation to the vrata devānām, also Indra and Savitr. In 6,68,9: the mighty ruler is revealed as Varuṇa: mahinā mahivrataḥ, which Geldner renders: "Er der mit Macht mächtig Gebietende" . . . and also: ya urvi . . . vibhāti: "who as mahivrataḥ shines his light through the Universe".

19. The devas are the rulers of the Universe.

This quality is of the greatest importance. Certainly it has been revealed implicitly in 18 about the vrata devānām, but quite explicitly we hear that they are:

a) Creators or begetters of Agni in whom heaven and earth rest and who rule both worlds cf. 1,59,2: Also 2,40,1: where Soma and Pūṣan are mentioned as procreators of the world. Worth noting is: Agni governs this world and the devas beget this deva Agni; cf. 1,59,2:.

b) The Adityas and Savitr are the rulers of the Universe. Then they are the leaders of mankind (1,90,1: Varuṇo Mitrō . . . devaiḥ sajoṣāḥ "unanimously together with the devas"). They show us the right path (1,169,5:). They protect this world: viśvarya bhuvanarya gopāḥ; cf. 2,27,4: and also 2,38,2: 4: Some devas are the kings of all nations samrājām cf. 3,10,1 (Agni) and 5,68,2: 6,68,9: 8,25,4: Indra is called a chieftain of the clan viśpati cf. 3,40,3: and Soma: sahasrajit 9,80,4: There are expressions like rājā kṛtṣṇinām (4,17,5:} Indra, or rājā devaḥ (Soma 9,108,8:} as well as viśvarya gopā "Guardians of the Universe" to Mitra-Varuṇa (8,25,1:).

And again in 9,86,30: Soma is praised as: "all worlds are under thou" and hymn 4,53 lauds deva Savitr as asura, as the great governor of heaven and earth. From him emanates authority and he keeps an eye on every law and any being; he commands the Universe and grants offspring.

c) The devas also stand for restoration of the disturbed order either physical or moral. It is therefore that one prays to them for forgiveness, e.g. 1,25,1 ff. is a hymn to invoke pardon of god; cf. also 2,29: and 5,85,8: And almost always it is Varuṇa who pardons the human beings.

Their will for redress expresses itself by their institution of punishments cf. 1,193,5: (Bṛhaspati) and 2,29,5: where Mitra-Varuṇa, Aditi, Indra and the Maruts are the avengers of the law.

20. The devas are satyadharmāṇah.

According to Grassmann (o.c., p. 1453) it means: "whose laws are valid". M. Williams (o.c., p. 1053:) Ved. "practising the duty of truth and virtue". And I should like to suggest: "whose rule of life is in accord with the law of truth and reality". We meet this term with Agni: 1,12,7: 5,51,2: with Mitra-Varuṇa 5,63,1: and Savitr 10,34,8: 139,3: 10,121,9: gives this satyadharmāṇah as epithet to the Supreme Being "with valid laws" (Geldner renders: "mit gültigen Gesetzen"). A few words about the most important sacred texts.

and also for nature, animals, and devas. Even the devas have their rules proceeding from, and being manifestations or emanations of, eternally and generally valid standards and laws". So Gonda proceeds: "between law and order in the macrocosmos and on the other hand ethical, as well as social and juridical rules, there is not to be made any essential distinction. Every human being strives after a state of life wherein he is exempted from joy and distress, if the person concerned is a good species of mankind. Well then", the author continues, "the complete and perfect dharma consists of that steady stability that grants him this complete satisfaction and happiness". Personally I for one have a vague feeling that dharma is the subjective aspect of the objective law and eternal order: ṛta.

21. The power of the devas over life and death.

A good number of passages show us that the powers of the devas extend to life and death.

a) We meet such phrases as āyur devahitam: "the range of life ordered by the devas", cf. also 10,170,1: ("Er hat die Geschöpfe zum Wachsen gebracht") and 1,89,8: says that the devas have decided upon the age of human life.

b) Throughout the entire RV. we come across prayers to the devas to prolong the lives of mankind: 1,10,11: Compare also: 1,34,11: prāyus tāriṣṭam nī rapāṃsi mṛksatam sedhatam dveṣo bhavatam śacābhuvā: Geldner renders: "(O Āsṛins) prolong this life, ward off all evil, do away with enmity, be to us a friend and helper"²⁷). We encounter prayers as: "do not rob us of our lives", cf. 1,24,11:.

c) The devas have the power to shorten life's span (1,92,10:).

d) The devas give life as a grant, to our children. So they are brought for offspring, 1,113,17: cf. also 6,67,4: garbham aditiḥ bhṛadhyai "may Aditi give pregnancy".

4) Especially the Adityas have a close relation to the vrata devānām, also Indra and Savitṛ. In 6,68,9: the mighty ruler is revealed as Varuṇa: mahinā mahivrataḥ, which Geldner renders: "Er der mit Macht mächtig Gebietende" . . . and also: ya urchi . . . vibhāti: "who as mahivrataḥ shines his light through the Universe".

19. The devas are the rulers of the Universe.

This quality is of the greatest importance. Certainly it has been revealed implicitly in 18 about the vrata devānām, but quite explicitly we hear that they are:

a) Creators or begetters of Agni in whom heaven and earth rest and who rule both worlds cf. 1,59,2: Also 2,40,1: where Soma and Pūṣan are mentioned as procreators of the world. Worth noting is: Agni governs this world and the devas beget this deva Agni; cf. 1,59,2:

b) The Adityas and Savitṛ are the rulers of the Universe. Then they are the leaders of mankind (1,90,1: Varuṇo Mitro . . . devaiḥ sajoṣāḥ "unanimously together with the devas"). They show us the right path (1,169,5:). They protect this world: viśvāya bhuvanāya gopāḥ; cf. 2,27,4: and also 2,38,2: 4: Some devas are the kings of all nations saṃrājāṃ cf. 3,10,1 (Agni) and 5,68,2: 6,68,9: 8,25,4: Indra is called a chieftain of the clan viśpati cf. 3,40,3: and Soma: śaśtrājit 9,80,4: There are expressions like rājā kṛṣṇinām (4,17,5:) Indra, or rājā devaḥ (Soma 9,108,8:) as well as viśvāya gopā "Guardians of the Universe" to Mitra-Varuṇa (8,25,1:).

And again in 9,86,30: Soma is praised as: "all worlds are under thou" and hymn 4,53 lauds deva Savitṛ as asura, as the great governor of heaven and earth. From him emanates authority and he keeps an eye on every law and any being; he commands the Universe and grants offspring.

c) The devas also stand for restoration of the disturbed order either physical or moral. It is therefore that one prays to them for forgiveness, e.g. 1,25,1 ff. is a hymn to invoke pardon of god; cf. also 2,29: and 5,85,8: And almost always it is Varuṇa who pardons the human beings.

Their will for redress expresses itself by their institution of punishments cf. 1,190,5: (Bṛhaspati) and 2,29,5: where Mitra-Varuṇa, Aditi, Indra and the Maruts are the avengers of the law.

the great hero through whom the devas overcame the dasyus"³⁰).
Indra beats the dasyus: 2,12,10:.

So we come across an adjective dasyubha 1,100,12: 6,16,15: 45,24: 8,76,11: 77,3: 39,8:.. And in their battles they are quick and swift like the chariots of the Maruts cf. 1,186,8:.

24. The devas always ride something.

This seems to indicate sublimity and augustness. They are driven to the place of sacrifice cf. 1,84,18: 6,55,6:.. Agni is the one who has to invite them and drive them cf. 1,74,6: 142,1: ³¹) devā ā vahān ānu homa.

Not only to sacrifice and to the rites, but the devas ride always:
vahnibhir devair ... sayāvabhiḥ (1,44,13:). Sometimes the priest is told to carry the devas to the place of offerings, cf. 2,36,4:.

And last Agni is named the "Charioteer of the devas", thus Geldner renders the term aratiḥ (o.c., I, p. 281) cf. 2,4,2: 1,128,6: 4,2,1: 6,12,3: 15,4: 67,8: 10,3, passim: 45,7:.. Sometimes we read that the Āśvins take the devas for a ride in their chariot, 7,72,2:.

In my opinion this riding is nothing else than a metaphor. They do not touch the earth; they are too exalted to go on foot. Perhaps this may not point to a divine trait, but certainly it shows the high respect the Vedic Indian had for his devas. Even nowadays only the husband goes on horseback while his wife follows on foot, so does the bhānya ride and his servants walk, sometimes, they lead a horse behind them. As soon as their employer disappears, they mount and proceed on horseback.

25. Several times the might and power of the devas are lauded in this way, that their friendship is praised so highly and called of greatest importance.

Geldner renders in his 1st ed. druvā with "friendship" cf. 1,36,14:
3,16,4: 5,50,1: 22,3:.. Those passages show clearly the great value we have to attach to the friendship and favour of the devas. Every mortal should try and acquire the friendship of the devas cf. 1,136,7: ūti devānāṃ tvyam indravanto māmsīmahi svayajaso marudbhiḥ. Geld-ner renders: "By the help (or favour) of the devas, possessing the favour of Indra, by the Maruts we may feel ourselves honoured". And 4,10,8: quite evidently says: friendship and brotherhood with the devas is quite profitable to us. 1,36,12: informs us that Agni is powerful and wealthy as he possesses the friendship of the devas.

26. The devas have some relationship to light.

So many authors share the opinion that deva is to be derived

22. The devas are strong and powerful.

That sort of description we encounter with the devas in a large variety: vājin "strong, powerful but especially powerful-in-battle". Geldner accordingly translates "Siegesstark", cf. 1,23,19.

This term frequently occurs with the devas as genus, and with the individuals as well. So often with Agni: 2,1,12;. But also other terms are in use: sahasāvan 1,91,23: "mighty and enormous", said of Soma: to Agni 1,189,5: 3,1,22: 5,20,4: 6,15,12: 7,1,24: 10,21,4: 115,8: cf. also 7,4,6: 43,5:, to Indra 7,19,7: 10,93,11:.

There is a slight nuance in sahasāna: to Agni 2,10,6: 5,25,9: 7,7,1: and also 1,189,8:.

We meet kratur amṛtaḥ "of unbroken power" cf. 3,11,6: 9,69,5: so apratita "irresistible" 6,73,3:.

Another term of great importance for the history of Indian Religions is māyā. In his paper on "māyā" Prof. Gonda gives a survey of the concept. In short, he states, it is a special knowledge and wisdom and power directed by that knowledge:

1) cosmic power cf. RV, 3,61,7: 1,160,3: and with the content of incomprehensible creative force. cf. 10,24,4: 53,9: 9,83,3: An incomprehensible command often ascribed to mighty beings;

2) power = assume another shape or form cf. 3,53,8: 6,47,18:;

3) sometimes one could translate it as "fraud";

4) elsewhere one encounters traits of trick and strategem and subtle device;

5) or the magic power to make oneself invisible;

6) and the tricks of an illusionist, etc. *).

Working through the texts I found myself a meaning like: "might and power by ruse and cunning" cf. 3,20,3: 27,7: 61,7: 5,63,4: 10,54,2:.

Another trait we find in sahasā jayamānaḥ (6,44,22:) "born through power" or expressions like śunu sahasaḥ: "Son of force" (7,1,22) * or putra sahasaḥ cf. 2,7,6: 5,11,6: I discovered a single passage where one could consider that irresistibility is a consequence of magic power: 6,73,3: apratito byaspatir banty amitraṃ arkaḥ "Bṛhaspati the irresistible beats his enemy by his (sacred) hymns".

23. The devas beat the dasyu.

The devas use their force to conquer and overcome the dasyu, who were probably the aboriginals of India at the time the Aryans invaded it: cf. 3,29,9: Agniḥ... sūriro yena devāso asahanta dasyūn: "Agni

Thus we have to recognise the high and supreme dignity of the devas in the eyes of the Vedic Indians. So far above us are the devas that even their abode is invisible.

27. A series of descriptive attributes.

a) mayobhu or mayobhū.

Grassmann and Geldner both render this as: "givers of joy and gladness". This is not correct. The correct rendering is: "givers of joy and gladness".

Something of like meaning is raṇva, sometimes however: "finding one's joy in warfare" cf. 4,37,1: for Agni 1,69,4: 5: Bṛhaspati 2,24,11: the Rbhus 4,37,1:.

b) maghavan: "rich in gifts" with a nuance of: "prepared to bestow those gifts upon someone". This is an almost exclusive name and epithet of Indra. cf. 1,33,12: 15: 52,11²²). The same is said too of Brahmanaspati cf. 2,24,12: Soma (4,28,5:) and Agni (5,86,3:) but as connected with Indra. We may conclude that maghavan is the epithet of Indra. This might disclose his own character: "powerful, rich, enormous also in bestowing grants upon others".

We also find another term related to it: māghona "liberally, and generously powerful" cf. 4,17,5: 6,43,4: 10,66,2: 107,1: . Of course the liberality occurs to us in a different expression, 4,35,8: "thou bestower of treasures" or 4,36,5: "whom the gods favour, he is a most eminent one".

c) So we come across the opinion that the devas fulfil the wishes and heart's desires of the mortals: cf. Agni deveṣu vanate vāryāṇi 5,4,3: and 6,15,6: devo deveṣu vanate vāryam and the same we find expressed in 5,41,7: martyo ... devāso vanate. In a sūkta addressed to Agni we find draviṇasyavaḥ which Geldner renders "die wir nach Reichtum verlangen"; cf. 5,13,2:.

d) Something similar is found about the god Savitṛ. 5,82,1: where Savitṛ is said to be sarvadhātana: "bestowing everything" so also sarvadhā occurs to Soma 9,18,1: and to Bhāga 8,31,11:.

e) vasu "good-natured" is said of Agni 5,25,1: ²³) and 5,41,18: 7,38,3: is said about all devas: devās vasavaḥ. Reminding the reader of 27b.) we will certainly not feel surprised to hear Indra praised as vasu as well cf. 1,10,4: ²⁴).

f) subhita is said of some devas: Indra cf. 3,30,13: 32,8: 34,6: 6,19,1: . It should mean here: "honest, upright, honorable". As the

from the root div- denoting the idea of celestial light following M. Williams, Grassmann, and L. von Schröder, and several texts show us that some devas at least are spirits of light cf. 1,19,5: where they are called śubrah "shining, radiant, bright, white". St. 6 says that the devas live rocane divi "in the light-giving sky". Especially in maṇḍala 3—6 those passages about light stand out. However, those phrases do not occur in connexion with the devas as a group, but are connected with the names of definite devas, so e.g. 1,35,8: 3,62,10: 4,14,1: 2: 13,1: 2: 4: 5,81,4: 5: and 5,82,4: 5: to Savitr. The same to Agni 5,6,4: 6,48,7: Pūṣan 6,58,1: and Uṣas 6,64,5: she is called too: divo dubitar "daughter of the shining firmament" (6,64,5:). She and Agni are called divijā: "born or begotten in the sky" (7,75,1: 6,65,1: 8,43,28:) and 10,88,7: speaks about divi yoni: "in the womb of the sky".

b) They are called divisprśah "touching heaven" cf. 1,22,2: 23,2: 5,13,2: 9,11,4: 10,88,1: and Savitr is said to fill out the heavenly and earthly spaces cf. 4,53,3:.

c) The same sky is also the dwelling place of the devas cf. 3,6,8: and 1,19,6: too tell us that the devas divo rocane santi: "they dwell in the light-giving sky". On this rocane Lüders gives a few remarks in his Varuna I, p. 66.

Rocane divi is the invisible heaven, whereas nāka is firmament, visible to us; cf. rocane divah in 8,10,1: 97,5: 9,86,27: So rocanaṃ divah 8,98,3: and diva cid rocanād occurs cf. 1,49,1: 5,56,1: 8,8,7:.

1,6,9: no doubt points out that the devas are in heaven and also that they dwell there with certain preference in rocane divah. From there they depart in order to go to the place of sacrifices 8,10,1: On the other hand it is not the only name for the abode of the devas. We also encounter the antarikṣa. That is the intermediate space between heaven and earth: 1,164,39: speaks of vīṣṭe devā niṣeduh paramē vyomani, and again 3,6,8: antarikṣe madanti "the devas dwell in the sky or atmosphere" and immediately follows: divo vā ye rocane santi devāḥ, thus putting antarikṣa and rocane devas on the same level.

6,50,11: however, suggests that the devas not only belong to heaven, but to earth as well: "born in the cow", "born in the waters" and 6,52,13: says antarikṣa is to be separated from ya upa dyāvī ṣṭha. Though rocana and antarikṣa are on the same footing, antarikṣa is shown in 6,52,13: not to be identical with dyāvī ṣṭha.

8,58,3: says that the rocane divah "the invisible sky" is threefold trīṣv ā rocane divah. One has to see the rocane divah as a shining, light giving heavenly abode, yet hidden to our earthly eyes. There are even fields, where the heavenly horses dwell cf. 1,162,7: devānām fuṣṭe.

Thus we have to recognise the high and supreme dignity of the devas in the eyes of the Vedic Indians. So far above us are the devas that even their abode is invisible.

27. A series of descriptive attributes.

a) mayobhu or mayobhū.

Grassmann and Geldner both render this as: "givers of joy and gladness: refreshing". This occurs for Pūṣan 1,138,2: Agni 3,26,1: The Adityas 5,42,1: and brahma id. 2: the Aśvins 5,43,8: 73,9: 8,8,9: and also 1,92,18: the Maruts 1,166,3: 8,20,24.

Something of like meaning is raṇva, sometimes however: "finding one's joy in warfare" cf. 4,37,1: for Agni 1,69,4: 5: Bṛhaspati 2,24,11: the Rbhus 4,37,1.

b) maghavan: "rich in gifts" with a nuance of: "prepared to bestow those gifts upon someone". This is an almost exclusive name and epithet of Indra. cf. 1,33,12: 15: 52,11²³). The same is said too of Brahmanaspati cf. 2,24,12: Soma (4,28,5:) and Agni (5,86,3:) but as connected with Indra. We may conclude that maghavan is the epithet of Indra. This might disclose his own character: "powerful, rich, enormous also in bestowing grants upon others".

We also find another term related to it: māghana "liberally, and generously powerful" cf. 4,17,5: 6,43,4: 10,66,2: 107,1. Of course the liberality occurs to us in a different expression, 4,35,8: "thou bestower of treasures" or 4,36,5: "whom the gods favour, he is a most eminent one".

c) So we come across the opinion that the devas fulfil the wishes and heart's desires of the mortals: cf. Agni devaṣu vanate vāryāni 5,4,3: and 6,15,6: deva devaṣu vanate vāryam and the same we find expressed in 5,41,7: martyo ... devāso vanate. In a śūkta addressed to Agni we find draviṇasyavaḥ which Geldner renders "die wir nach Reichtum verlangen"; cf. 5,13,2.

d) Something similar is found about the god Savitṛ. 5,82,1: where Savitṛ is said to be sarvadātana: "bestowing everything" so also sarvadā occurs to Soma 9,18,1: and to Bhāga 8,31,11.

e) vasu "good-natured" is said of Agni 5,25,1:²⁴) and 5,41,18: 7,38,3: is said about all devas: devās vasavaḥ. Reminding the reader of 27b.) we will certainly not feel surprised to hear Indra praised as vasu as well cf. 1,10,4:²⁵).

f) sukta is said of some devas: Indra cf. 3,30,13: 32,8: 34,6: 6,19,1. It should mean here: "honest, upright, honorable". As the literal meaning is: "well done", this could be the reason that it has not been often used with the devas, cf. 5,66,1:.

g) They praise their devas as satya: "true, truthful". In times to come this very epithet will be of greatest importance; it will be the technical term for the essence of every being. Up to now it does not play a prominent part. We hear Agni called satya: most often connected with hotṛ cf. 1,1,5: and 1,76,5: 3,14,1: Only 5,25,2: praises him as the satya "the true".

Uṣas only once receives this epithet 7,75,7: and the devas as genus just occasionally are worshipped with satya cf. 7,75,7:, so Indra is called satya, often connected with other adjectives cf. 1,63,3: 2,22,1: 4,16,1: 6,22,1: 8,40,11: 62,12: This very Indra is lauded in 8,69,4: as "son of truth" and 4,17,5: worships him as "the True".

h) pracetas, and other terms expressing wisdom.

We encounter the concept of wisdom under several terms in different nuances. RV. appears to regard wisdom as one of the most characteristic traits of the devas, either as genus, or as individuals.

A group of texts reveres the devas as being wise, but also: full of insight. cf. 1,44,7: 2,23,2: 4,1,1: 10,63,8: 66,1: 85,17: Elsewhere Varuṇa is mentioned as asura full of wisdom cf. 1,24,14: 41,1: 5,71,2: In other passages Geldner renders it by "vorsorgend". Why? maybe as a special token of wisdom, cf. 8,67,17: 47,4: 83,5: So Agni is called "sensible and foreseeing" cf. 2,10,3: *). So also Indra 1,5,7: 7,31,10: 8,90,6: It is at least debatable if this wisdom of Indra's is just what it is purported to be — cf. 1,5,7: where Indra is praised as the "wise one" and at the same time described as "full of soma".

I feel forced to note that those passages do not make it clear what the Indian in Vedic times considered wisdom. One of these nuances is vicetas meaning "wise and gifted with right insight". The devas as a group are honoured only once by this epithet cf. 1,45,2. Agni, Indra, the Maruts, and Mitra Varuṇa also several times, but human beings too: cf. 7,7,4:.

There are other expressions like: dhīyā "with intellect" (1,46,2:) "detecting treasures" (1,91,23:) "sind die Hüter der ganzen Welt" (2,27,4:) dirghādhiyā "with great ideas" and kṛtvī cf. 3,14,7: almost exclusively used for Agni. Cf. also 1,1,5: 27,12: 5,11,4 6,16,23: We come across dakṣa (3,14,7:) and śudakṣa (7,66,2:) Stichoupak, Nitri and Renou explain this term as "capable, adroit, habile, expert, compétent, intelligent, actif, convenable, commode" o.c., p. 296.

Other terms such as kavi, kṛtitarā and kṛtitarāma occur frequently cf. 3,54,17: *). In their dictionary the same French authors render this term as: "intelligent, prudent, sage; penseur, sage, prophète, poète, chanteur" (o.c., p. 184). Kratu — we already referred to sukratu — is of the same content. Used for Indra cf. 1,5,6: 51,13: for Varuṇa cf. 1, 25,10: 12: 123,8: 5,65,1: 7,61,2: 8,25,2: 5: 8: for Agni 1,77,3: 3,3,7: 8,19,17: Maṇḍala 9th is the Soma-collection of hymns. Everywhere one comes across the terms kratu and sukratu relating to Soma. cf. 9,2,3: 12,4: 48,3: 63,28: 65,30: 70,6: 72,8: 73,8: 86,43: 102,3: Vidvān: part. perf. "qui sait, savant, sage, intelligent, versé dans" o.c. p. 657. It seems that the Vedic Indian saw this trait as characteristic of the deva concept, cf. 1,24,13: 103,3: 145,5: 190,7: cf. also 116,11: 120,3: *). Another shade of meaning: viśvavedas: "knowing everything". This epithet is met with viśvadeva cf. 8,27,2: 4: 11: 10,66: 5: So also with Indra cf. 6,47,12: and 10,131,6: We hear Agni praised as viśvavedas in 1,21,1: 36,3: 44,7: 128,8: 147,3: 3,20,4: 25,1: 4,4,13: and also the Adityas 8,18,11: 25,3: 5,67,3:.

i) Another epithet shows the devas as "being unanimous", united in their intentions and the like: sajoṣa cf. 2,31,2: 5,21,3: Also "unanimously deciding" cf. 6,67,5: 7,34,15: yet 7,72,2: 8,26,8: where it may express "together". The related texts show in all shades and are used for the devas generally speaking, as well as individually of Agni, the Maruts, and Varuṇa.

)) amīvacātana "warding off diseases". A good number of passages laud the devas as having a personal power to cure. Thus "upon your word the illness will disappear" cf. 1,12,7: 35,9: 6,74,2: 10,37,4: 63,12: 100,8: 162,1: 2:.

Another term occurs: bhīṣajy "to cure" in the sense of "being physician" and this is usually said of the Aśvins. They are the practitioners of Indian medicine and the patron saints of it as well cf. 8,9,6: 22,10: 10,131,5:.

k) brūṣṭvan "listening".

Its proper meaning is: "Listening to someone and always ready to listen" with a shade of: "ready to grant the wishes the deva hears of". So the devas are addressed in 1,45,2: Also the Aśvins 1,119,1: and Agni 1,127,9. cf. also 3,27,2: with the expectation of being answered in gifts asked for. Agni is lauded as: "the one who grants our wishes" or as Geldner renders it: "Den Erhörenden, der das Erwartete besitzt".

l) In my opinion a rather odd epithet is: uṣarbudh: "early riser". One can only understand this epithet, if it has the meaning of "early risen" in order to bestow our wishes and so, as to guard our ways and to ward off evil. It is used of all devas as group cf. 1,14,9:

44,1: 9: -92,18: where Geldner inserts: "the priests" and refers to 7,76,6:.. Sometimes there can be felt a nuance of: "early to be present at the offerings". This very epithet is used with a certain preference for Agni, but here as priest performing the rites cf. 1,127,10: 132,2: 65,9: 3,2,14: 6,4,2: 15,1:.

We encounter a nuance of "vigilant" in 8,89,1: And this adjective we often find with Agni: "he is the watchman of the devas" cf. 1,31,9: 3,26,3:.. Elsewhere he is praised as "wakeful" 3,2,12: and 24,3:.. In 3,3,7: he is named in short: "the vigilant one". His alertness is extended to include human beings cf. 5,11,1: Indra received the same epithet only once "thou watchful" 8,92,23: Soma receives it oftener, at times as a substantive 9,97,37: sometimes as an adjective cf. 9,36,2: 44,3: 71,1: 97,2: 106,4: 107,6:.

28. Some of the attributes of a less sublime character.

Under this heading I should like to collect a number of utterances to be taken as widely as possible, to prove that the devas had some less sublime traits of character, or certain weaknesses, either moral, or physical, and this is most important as we cannot believe that the Vedic Indians did not think that those qualities are incompatible with a Supreme Being.

a) devānām dviṣ "the hatred of the devas".

So 1,133,7 implores Indra to ward off the hatred of the devas. What this enmity consists of is not mentioned, but the context suggests: piśācis and the witches with their harmful power. 1,39,10: speaks of the enmity of the Maruts, but this is a just punishment for everyone who acts against the ṛṣi. But Agni (2,7,2:) and Soma (8,79,9:) are requested to protect us against the hatred of the devas and men. No word is said about the cause of this ill-feeling.

b) 1,142,9: lūciṃ deवेव्य arpitā hotrā marutsu bhārati: "die reine unter die Götter, unter die Maruts versetzte Hotrā Bhārati". I cannot help supposing that this suggests that some devas have not any right to receive this epithet of lūci. Yet, the term aiuci does not occur in RV. Sūci is only occasionally used of the devas as a group cf. 7,2,2: more used with a number of individuals like Agni, Varuṇa, Bṛhaspati and the Maruts.

c) We now come to a series of epithets that prove and demonstrate the limitation of power, knowledge and the like.

1° We read in RV. 1,164,50: about the pūrve devās: the Sīdhyas, "the former devas". One has to feel and accept here a clear and obvious dethronement and degradation.

Geldner refers to 7,21,7: where he renders pūrve devās as "die älteren Götter". Indra has been their chieftain. cf. 10, 90,16: Heaven has been mentioned here as the dwelling-place of those "retired" devas. 10,191,2: knows that those pūrve devas are unanimous at the table of offering. This is an obvious and evident proof, that the Vedic Indian could not find any difficulty in admitting a degradation and loss of supremacy even with regard to the devas. So we may safely conclude that the devas lack absolute independence, and so the envy which we shall mention later on, exists even among the devas.

2° RV. 1,100,15: relates that Indra exceeds all devas in might and power. The devas may have great power, but their influence is nevertheless limited: na yasya devā devatā na martā āpaścana śavaso antam āpuh "Whose force the devas with their deva power neither the mortals nor even the waters have found a limit for". Here we could even trace a hint that men are not so far behind the devas in power and influence. This limitation of power we may learn too in 3,2,3: the devas want to extend their power and influence. In order to reach this aim, they procreate Agni.

We could find another way of detecting the limitation of the devas in 1,160,4: where we hear about devānām apasām apastamah: "the most able craftsman among the able devas". More often we come across the term vāyudhānah "strengthening the devas"; one causes an increase in force and influence e.g. 5,3,10: Agni is mentioned so in 5,16,1: where byhad vayo tells us that "by sacred hymns and Agni grow every day in power utkuhyam vṛdhantau, and again 6,22,11: where one worshipping Indra apāh neil lit explores them to do their utmost tā nah śaktam: "do what you are able to do". Do not think that this is the full number of passages relating this limitedness of the devas' power. Everywhere in RV. we come across those places where man praises the still increasing force of the devas. One remark more is to be made. Logically one can reason while talking about the increase of might, implicitly acknowledges and proves "lack of almighty". But the other way round, one could consider these frequent references to increasing influence the strength of saying that the devas are almighty. It would be worth to consider this remark.

This is the way of saying that the devas are almighty. It would be worth to consider this remark.

Ma: the devas are almighty by sacrifices and by mutual

44,1: 9: 92,18: where Geldner inserts: "the priests" and refers to 7,76,6: Sometimes there can be felt a nuance of: "early to be present at the offerings". This very epithet is used with a certain preference for Agni, but here as priest performing the rites cf. 1,127,10: 132,2: 65,9: 3,2,14: 6,4,2: 15,1:.

We encounter a nuance of "vigilant" in 8,89,1: And this adjective we often find with Agni: "he is the watchman of the devas" cf. 1,31,9: 3,26,3: Elsewhere he is praised as "wakeful" 3,2,12: and 24,3: In 3,3,7: he is named in short: "the vigilant one". His alertness is extended to include human beings cf. 5,11,1: Indra received the same epithet only once "thou watchful" 8,92,23: Soma receives it oftener, at times in a substantive 9,97,37: sometimes as an adjective cf. 9,36,2: 44,3: 71,1: 97,2: 106,4: 107,6:.

28. Some of the attributes of a less sublime character.

Under this heading I should like to collect a number of utterances to be taken as widely as possible, to prove that the devas had some less sublime traits of character, or certain weaknesses, either moral, or physical, and this is most important as we cannot believe that the Vedic Indians did not think that those qualities are incompatible with a Supreme Being.

a) devānām dviṣ "the hatred of the devas".

So 1,133,7 implores Indra to ward off the hatred of the devas. What this enmity consists of is not mentioned, but the context suggests: piśācis and the witches with their harmful power. 1,39,10: speaks of the enmity of the Maruts, but this is a just punishment for everyone who acts against the ṛiṣ. But Agni (2,7,2) and Soma (8,79,9:) are requested to protect us against the hatred of the devas and men. No word is said about the cause of this ill-feeling.

b) 1,142,9: lūciṣ devaḥ arpitā boṭrā marutīm bhārati. "die reine unter die Götter, unter die Maruts versetzte I boṭrā Bhārati". I cannot help supposing that this suggests that some devas have not any right to receive this epithet of lūci. Yet, the term lūci does not occur in RV. Sūci is only occasionally used of the devas as a group cf. 7,2,2: more used with a number of individuals like Agni, Varuṇa, Bṛhaspati and the Maruts.

c) We now come to a series of epithets that prove and demonstrate the limitation of power, knowledge and the like.

1° We read in RV. 1,164,50: about the pārve devāḥ the Sādhyaḥ, "the former devas". One has to feel and accept here a clear and obvious dethronement and degradation.

see cf. 1,69,2: devan divah "Son of heaven" cf. 5,74,1. This father is Agni, but elsewhere it may be Brahmanaspati, who receives the epithet of devānām pitā cf. 2,26,3; 3,54,9. Rodasī (Heaven-and-Earth) are devaputre. Soma begot the devas (9,42,4) and devī janitrī procreated Indra cf. 10,134,1—6.

We may distinguish a certain kinship and moreover family relations among the devas. 2,32,6: speaks of svasā devānām "a sister of the gods" (one out of many) and 8,101,15: speaks about the sisters of the Adityas cf. also 1,124,8. Uṣas 1,180,2: 123,5: and 191,6: speaks of Aditi. Elsewhere we encounter the relation of brother of Agni 1,161,1: 3: 164,1: 4,1,2: 6,51,5: 8,43,16: 10,7,3: 11,2: also of Soma 1,191,6: and of Indra cf. 1,170,2: 3,53,5: 6,55,5. Sometimes one encounters expressions that the devas are our brothers cf. 10,11,2. Geldner remarks in his note o.c. III, p. 137 "der Älteste (Amis)bruder des Priesters insbesondere des Hoiṣ ist Agni. Gemeint ist doch wohl: er soll entscheiden was wir als Belohnung bekommen sollen" cf. also 10,7,3: and 186,2.

So we meet a material principle as begetter of the devas cf. 6,50,11: and 10,65,9: they are called divyāḥ, pārthivāḥ, gojātāḥ (10,53,5:) and āptyāḥ: showing from whence they proceeded and where they belong. About āptya I want to add some notes. Some scholars tried to explain the figure and position of Trita āptya. E. Hardy²⁹⁾ saw Trita āptya as a lunar deity, Macdonell³⁰⁾ as a thunder and lightning divinity. Bloomfield in PAOS. March 1894 considered Trita with his brothers Ekata and Dvita as the scapegoat of the Gods. Hillebrandt considered Trita as a deity closely connected with the cloudless sky, and Max Müller³¹⁾ wished to prove Trita āptya to be a solar deity. K. Rönnow made a special research on this.

elusion was that Trita āpt

his opinion on RV. 10,46

with varuṇa, having special relations with the waters, (as regards oaths and contracts) is called Trita. Further on he holds (o.c. p. 25) that Trita is a lustration god; together with his next of kin Ekata and Dvita; he purifies the devas and sacrifice (o.c. p. 28). It would be outside the scope of this work to prolong this discussion, but it is worth while reading this paper by Rönnow. To end this paragraph I would like to cite a few more passages relating to the kinship of the devas. We come across terms as janman cf. 2,35,6: 3,1,4: 20: 4,10: 42). Also janma which could mean "race, birth" or even "place of birth". cf. 1,20,1: 70,6: 71,3: 43). So too "clan, group of families" cf. 1,39,5: 50,5: 4,2,3: 5,26,9: 8,58,3: 64,8: 69,3: 75,8: and 2,26,3.

The Vedic Indian thought their devas had come into being by birth, in a place, living in clans or family groups, maybe in nations.

assistance cf. 10,14,3; and we find other means more detailed listed here: by ghṛta (3,5,8:); by the soma-draught (3,52,8:); by stoma-hymns (5,22,4:); by karma (9,46,3:); by arkas "rays of light" (8,16,9:); by thoughts mati (7,12,3:); and yajña "offering" (2,2,1:). It is worth while remarking that the same is never said of Mitra-Varuṇa.

3° The devas are not omniscient.

4,58,4: The devas do not know where to find the ghṛta. And they crave for it. They find it anyway, hidden in the cow. But their lack of knowledge is demonstrated because they had to search for it.

4° The devas themselves are not totally independent.

They too have to obey the laws and institutions of the ṛta cf. 1,65,3: ṛtasya devā anu vrātā gur bhūvat, and 2,38,9: Indra, even Mitra Varuṇa follow the orders of Savitṛ and elsewhere the devas are related as devā devānām anu vrātā guh (3,7,7:). The devas are called ṛtājñā: "versed in ṛta" cf. 10,65,14: and also 7,38,8: 1,72,8: where implicitly is said "that knowing the ṛta they keep it". Again 4,55,2: and 5,51,2: they are praised as ṛtadhītā "who acknowledge the ṛta".

29. The number of passages could make us believe that the devas are gods, men, perhaps with extraordinary gifts and talents, but anyway quite human through weaknesses and imperfections.

1° The devas are born jajñānaḥ somam sabase papātha: "just born, thou drinkest already soma" 7,98,3: cf. also 4,22,3: About their birth we can refer to 4,18,1: Geldner renders "der erprobte alte Weg, auf dem alle Götter geboren wurden", while 10,55,7: says that Indra begot the devas; they follow after Aditi in delivery cf. 10,72,8: Agni is begotten by the order devas cf. 1,59,2: 2,13,5: 6,15,18: 16,48: or 7,6: where the waters are referred to as creating Agni. 1,127,9: says that Agni is begotten for religion. Cf. Geldner o.c., I, p. 177 "Du Agni . . . als der ungestümste für den Götterdienst geboren". But could not devatātā mean: "the gathering (collectivity — the society) of the Gods"? Cf. Lat. societas, which represents the same formation. Yet, we come across passages where deva Agni has been begotten by the human beings cf. 3,9,6: 5,3,8: Agni himself produces in his turn the Angiras cf. 1,71,8:.

Indra is in the same circumstances. He has been begotten by a deva "creator" as Geldner renders it. 2,13,5: again relates to us the devas as procreators of Indra; 4,17,12: presents Indra, "who does not care for his parents", while 8,97,10: could be rendered as "begotten unto kingship". But eventually also "made king". Indra is begotten by Soma 7,21,1: Of course, we meet the consequences of this birth of the devas, as we come across expressions like devānām pitā or pitrāḥ

Agni as their messenger and ambassador (6,15,8) cf. also 5,25,2: where our ancestors and devas together are the principle and origin of Agni.

6,48,20: devas and martyas are on equal footing, and 6,30,4: teaches that Indra is the greatest among devas and men. Moreover their utterances are equal cf. 3,60,1: and last of all 1,139,9: tells that our line of descent reaches heaven, and from the devas proceeds our race: Geldner translates: "Ihre Reihe reicht zu den Göttern, von diesen stammt unser Geschlecht". Possibly this last passage is saying just a little too much; however, the other passages quoted do — no doubt — point out to us, that devas and martyas together appoint one and the same priest. Devas and martyas have equal rights to be present at rites and sacrifices. They have one king Brhaspati, Varuṇa or Indra. They equally need protection and intercession, as well as assistance and support in their offerings. Their laws and rules have an absolute power.

1,84,19: may surprise us, but not so very much after what we have said and summed up before: tvam āṅga pra śamīṣo devaḥ śamīṣṭha martyam: Geldner renders: "Du allein Gott wirst den Sterblichen loben." Here the roles are reversed, because the devas so much long for sacrifices. Sacrifice belongs to them as a daily need and only mankind can provide them with it.

30. The devas are the centre of religious life.

Though we had to demonstrate the human sides of the devas as well, still we are bound to state that the devas are the centre of pious thoughts. 1,132,5: didhīṣanta dhītayo devān achā na dhītayaḥ "may pious thoughts prepare themselves an abode in Indra's heart, as it becomes the devas that devout thoughts go to them"; cf. also 1,139,1:.

So 1,141,11: is a prayer that a good family father (who is the priest of the family) be granted to lead the prayers and thoughts to the devas. cf. also 10,31,1: So ūrdhvā dhītih are thoughts directed towards the devas or the Supreme Being. We are not so sure about 1,119,2:.

In order to go to the devas we have to be without sin: ātvānām dātāḥ ... anāgān no vocat (3,54,19:) cf. also 7,86,7: 87,7. 91,2: 10,12,8: 36,12: where we are taught to serve the devas in purity of heart, without sin. So 1,189,1 Agni is the priest who forgives our sin in order that we may not be let astray. Moreover 2,27,4: shows us the devas demanding penance.

Concluding this summary of the RV. I should like to mention a few terms we encountered with the adjective deva: Grassmann and Stichou-

2^o Some more strongly human adjectives.

Durmada "quarrelsome when drunk" cf. 1,32,6 39,5: mandarus "fuddle yourself with the devas"; cf. 2,36,3⁴¹). Mandin "loving to get drunk" or as Geldner renders: "rauschliebend" cf. 1,9,2: 1,101,1: said of Indra. In 1,134,2: it is said about Vāyu. Sometimes one notices that the authors do not want to see the after-effects of soma as something mean and low, and in getting drunk the devas (one could suggest) commit a meritorious deed. May be this is just a matter of hide-and-seek on the side of the Brahmins, to avoid too strong a condemnation by the people, where the priests using this sacred draught with the devas, get fuddled too. Generally speaking the Indian nowadays abhors and detests any use of strong liquor.

The devas act prudently and carefully kratunā cf. 1,69,2: 141,9: 2,12,1: manūvasū "rich in thought" cf. 5,74,1: vajrin: "carrying the thunderbolt" the magic thunder hammer of Indra. It is a club of special make. Cf. 6,59,3: This epithet expresses tremendous power⁴²).

Bhūrṇi "restless, agitated, excitedly active" cf. 3,3,5: 7,86,7: Puru-bhūtama "many-sided" cf. 4,44,4: 5,73,2: 8,22,3: 12: 9,94,3: sujāni "with good and able hands" 1,109,4: 71,9: 3,33,6: 54,12: 56,7: 6,49,9: 7,45,4: Something similar is sugabhati "with good arms" cf. 6,49,9: and ṛbhucan "handy, being a good craftsman". cf. 1,20,4: 51,2: 110,7: 8: 111,5: 3: 121,2: 161,6: 2,1,10: 3,5,6: 54,12: 6,49,9. and I believe there is no doubt that the last epithets show in concrete terms what the Indians thought of the omnipotence of their devas and of their power.

3^o Men and devas on the same level.

1,19,2: nahi devo na martyo mahas tava kratum parah: "your insight is not rivalled by deva or by any mortal", and in 1,161,2: we hear that the sons of Sudhanvan are equal to sacrifices as the devas. 1,185,8: speaks of injustice towards devas and men. So in 1,190,1: devas and men listen equally to Bṛhaspati. 2,7,2: "May not the enmity of devas and mortals fall upon us" and 2,27,10: teaches that Varuna is king over devas and mortals. 3,3,6: devas and men offer their sacrifices equally and Agni is their priest. This certainly indicates some brotherhood and 4,10,8: speaks of this: bhrātṛya between devas and men. Agni is to be their protector against violence and robbery cf. 4,12,5:.

This idea of similarity goes even further. Sin is something adverse to devas and mortals as well. Savitṛ should forgive us for both parties offended, and so is Agni the best priest among mankind: yajñīṣṭham māṁye jate (5,14,2:). Devas and humans together appoint

Agni as their messenger and ambassador (6,15,8) cf. also 5,25,2: where our ancestors and devas together are the principle and origin of Agni.

6,48,20: devas and martyas are on equal footing, and 6,30,4: teaches that Indra is the greatest among devas and men. Moreover their utterances are equal cf. 3,60,1: and last of all 1,139,9: tells that our line of descent reaches heaven, and from the devas proceeds our race: Geldner translates: "Ihre Reihe reicht zu den Göttern, von diesen stammt unser Geschlecht". Possibly this last passage is saying just a little too much; however, the other passages quoted do — no doubt — point out to us, that devas and martyas together appoint one and the same priest. Devas and martyas have equal rights to be present at rites and sacrifices. They have one king Brhaspati, Varuṇa or Indra. They equally need protection and intercession, as well as assistance and support in their offerings. Their laws and rules have an absolute power.

1,84,19: may surprise us, but not so very much after what we have said and summed up before: tvam aṅga pra śaṁṣiṣo devaḥ śaṁṣiṣṭha martyam: Geldner renders: "Du allein Gott wirst den Sterblichen loben." Here the roles are reversed, because the devas so much long for sacrifices. Sacrifice belongs to them as a daily need and only mankind can provide them with it.

30. The devas are the centre of religious life.

Though we had to demonstrate the human sides of the devas as well, still we are bound to state that the devas are the centre of pious thoughts. 1,132,5: didhīṣanta dhītayo devān achā na dhītayaḥ "may pious thoughts prepare themselves an abode in Indra's heart, as it becomes the devas that devout thoughts go to them"; cf. also 1,139,1:.

So 1,141,11: is a prayer that a good family father (who is the priest of the family) be granted to lead the prayers and thoughts to the devas. cf. also 10,31,1: So ūrdhvā dhītiḥ are thoughts directed towards the devas or the Supreme Being. We are not so sure about 1,119,2:.

In order to go to the devas we have to be without sin: devānām dātāḥ . . . anāgān no vocatu (3,54,19:) cf. also 7,86,7: 87,7. 91,2: 10,12,8: 36,12: where we are taught to serve the devas in purity of heart, without sin. So 1,189,1 Agni is the priest who forgives our sins in order that we may not be let astray. Moreover 2,27,4: shows us the devas demanding penance.

Concluding this summary of the RV. I should like to mention a few terms we encountered with the adjective deva: Grassmann and Stchou-

2° Some more strongly human adjectives.

Durmada "quarrelsome when drunk" cf. 1,32,6 39,5: mandasva "fuddle yourself with the devas"; cf. 2,36,3 41). Mandin "loving to get drunk" or as Geldner renders: "rauschliebend" cf. 1,9,2: 1,101,1: said of Indra. In 1,134,2: it is said about Vāyu. Sometimes one notices that the authors do not want to see the after-effects of soma as something mean and low, and in getting drunk the devas (one could suggest) commit a meritorious deed. May be this is just a matter of hide-and-seek on the side of the Brahmins, to avoid too strong a condemnation by the people, where the priests using this sacred draught with the devas, get fuddled too. Generally speaking the Indian nowadays abhors and detests any use of strong liquor.

The devas act prudently and carefully kratunā cf. 1,69,2: 141,9: 2,12,1: manāvassī "rich in thought" cf. 5,74,1: vajrin: "carrying the thunderbolt" the magic thunder hammer of Indra. It is a club of special make. Cf. 6,59,3: This epithet expresses tremendous power 41).

Bhūrṇi "restless, agitated, excitedly active" cf. 3,3,5: 7,86,7: Purnabhūtama "many-sided" cf. 4,44,4: 5,73,2: 8,22,3: 12: 9,94,3: supāni "with good and able hands" 1,109,4: 71,9: 3,33,6: 54,12: 56,7: 6,49,9: 7,45,4: Something similar is śugabhasti "with good arms" cf. 6,49,9: and ṛbhuvan "handy, being a good craftsman". cf. 1,20,4: 51,2: 110,7: 8: 111,5: 3: 121,2: 161,6: 2,1,10: 3,5,6: 54,12: 6,49,9: and I believe there is no doubt that the last epithets show in concrete terms what the Indians thought of the omnipotence of their devas and of their power.

3° Men and devas on the same level.

1,19,2: nahi devo na martyo mahas tava kratum parah: "your insight is not rivalled by deva or by any mortal", and in 1,161,2: we hear that the sons of Sudhanvan are equal to sacrifices as the devas. 1,185,8: speaks of injustice towards devas and men. So in 1,193,1: devas and men listen equally to Ṛhaspati. 2,7,2: "May not the enmity of devas and mortals fall upon us" and 2,27,10: teaches that Varuna is king over devas and mortals. 3,3,6: devas and men offer their sacrifices equally and Agni is their priest. This certainly indicates some brotherhood and 4,10,8: speaks of this: bhrājitra between devas and men. Agni is to be their protector against violence and robbery cf. 4,12,5:.

This idea of similarity goes even further. Sin is something adverse to devas and mortals as well. Savitṛ should forgive as for both parties offended, and so is Agni the best priest among mankind: yajīṣṭham mānuṣe jate (5,14,2:). Devas and humans together appoint portion of those human traits as anthropomorphisms. This may count for all those good traits like honesty and good-naturedness and helpfulness etc., but the weak and feeble sides of their character we must accept as a demonstration of their lack of pure and true divinity in the strict sense.

3. Finally there is a third group of elements of the deva concept, comprising what I should like to name "superhuman" or "super-normal". Here too we notice a group of sublime traits, e.g. the devas are exalted and powerful beings; protectors of mankind, and man needs them and is dependent upon them in many respects. They are strong and bellicose, and their friendship is of great importance. Some god-like qualities come forward as well, e.g. amṛtya "immortality" (in the sense of "utmost vitality"), their abode is the invisible heaven. Their wisdom is great, yet no omniscience. However, we come across some qualities that are intermingled with weakness and failings e.g. their power is combined with tricks and ruse. The amṛtya has been acquired and there is among them an order, with superiors and subjects. They are governed by laws and vratā devānām, and they have to obey.

Some qualities show that they are the object of sacrifices and hymns and that they are the centre of pious thinking. Man has to approach them in purity of heart. This last group of qualities exceeds by far those epithets that point out to divinity in the strict sense and those of purely human character. Moreover they exceed in number as well as in stress. As we meet those human qualities next to sublime ideas, ideas too lofty to be expressed properly in ordinary words, I am under the impression that this third group is decisive for our definition and description of the contents of the concept of deva according to the own ideas of the Indians. That does not mean that the average Indian has never made a sharpest and principal discrimination between human, and superhuman and divine. Yet, here the task of the Science of Religions obviously lies: to discern the thoughts of the Indians themselves about the term deva rendered in terms comprehensible to us.

Concluding: I believe to be justified in inferring that deva has been considered a superhuman and powerful being who was able to help mankind by his own power.

hu

hig

The devas are not men, except in a few respects: they are not God, though they participate in a few traits of his. They are an "in-between", they are superhuman, but subordinate to God. Whether pak, Nitti, Renou render it by "heavenly" cf. 1,164,18; manas, 7,104,18; adhvaya, 8,89,1; jyotis, 9,11,2; payas, 7,21,1; andhas.

Conclusions.

Here is a short concluding summary of the work on the RV.

1) The concept of deva has a small but important group of strictly supernatural elements, which certainly could convince us that deva stands for God in the strict sense. To sum up: a) adjectives composed with ṛta or substantive compounds, b) asura for inner value, c) the role of rulers of the universe, d) while at the same time their powers extend over life and death, e) and the quality by which they forgive the sins of man.

But we have to bring against this that those elements do not belong to the concept of deva in general, but adhere as title to the Adityas and above all to Varuna (or Varuna-Mitra). Some exceptional extension to Indra and Agni may be reckoned as ex ordine quasi-participantium. Personally I have the impression that the Vedic Indian himself has made this discrimination, clearly or vaguely, between deva in general and the Adityas; and that to the Adityas (especially to some of them) may be given the title of God, but not to the term deva qua talis.

2) Another group of components are the purely human qualities the devas seem to possess. Part of them belongs to and has connexion with the cultus, and therefore surely raises the human mind to higher spheres. I may point to terms as: purohita, hotar, dāta and the like. Some other epithets grant the deva a propitious, yet human character: just, benevolent, helpful, prudent, many-sided, liberal and rich in thoughts; and again other epithets provide the devas with the imperfections and weakness of mankind, as they are subject to laws. They are envious, full of hatred at times, ambitious, impatient and given to drink, not to mention their gluttony; they are powerful, yet limited in might. Sometimes we encounter the title deva when given to non-humans, even lifeless things while elsewhere we see deva and man on the same level.

This very large complex of human components in the concept of deva does not allow me to conclude that: deva is equal with God in the strict sense. What one might consider is that those sublime epithets given to the devas, are an exaggerated and superabundant praise, in order to win the devas' favour. But it does not prove that the Vedic Indian truly conceived the devas as gifted with strictly divine qualities. However, we feel inclined as well to consider an important pak, Nitti, Renou render it by "heavenly" cf. 1,164,18; manas, 7,104,18; adhvata, 8,89,1; jyotis, 9,11,2; payas, 7,21,1; andhat.

Conclusions.

Here is a short concluding summary of the work on the RV.

1) The concept of deva has a small but important group of strictly supernatural elements, which certainly could convince us that deva stands for God in the strict sense. To sum up: a) adjectives composed with ṛta or substantive compounds, b) asura for inner value, c) the role of rulers of the universe, d) while at the same time their powers extend over life and death, e) and the quality by which they forgive the sins of man.

But we have to bring against this that those elements do not belong to the concept of deva in general, but adhere as title to the Adityas and above all to Varuṇa (or Varuṇa-Mitra). Some exceptional extension to Indra and Agni may be reckoned as ex ordine quasi-participantium. Personally I have the impression that the Vedic Indian himself has made this discrimination, clearly or vaguely, between deva in general and the Adityas; and that to the Adityas (especially to some of them) may be given the title of God, but not to the term deva qua talis.

2) Another group of components are the purely human qualities the devas seem to possess. Part of them belongs to and has connexion with the cultus, and therefore surely raises the human mind to higher spheres. I may point to terms as: purohita, hotar, dūta and the like. Some other epithets grant the deva a propitious, yet human character: just, benevolent, helpful, prudent, many-sided, liberal and rich in thoughts; and again other epithets provide the devas with the imperfections and weakness of mankind, as they are subject to laws. They are envious, full of hatred at times, ambitious, impatient and given to drink, not to mention their gluttony; they are powerful, yet limited in might. Sometimes we encounter the title deva when given to non-humans, even lifeless things while elsewhere we see deva and man on the same level.

This very large complex of human components in the concept of deva does not allow me to conclude that: deva is equal with God in the strict sense. What one might consider is that those sublime epithets given to the devas, are an exaggerated and superabundant praise, in order to win the devas' favour. But it does not prove that the Vedic Indian truly conceived the devas as gifted with strictly divine qualities. However, we feel inclined as well to consider an important portion of those human traits as anthropomorphisms. This may count for all those good traits like honesty and good-naturedness and helpfulness etc., but the weak and feeble sides of their character we must accept as a demonstration of their lack of pure and true divinity in the strict sense.

3. Finally there is a third group of elements of the deva concept, comprising what I should like to name "superhuman" or "supernormal". Here too we notice a group of sublime traits, e.g. the devas are exalted and powerful beings; protectors of mankind, and man needs them and is dependent upon them in many respects. They are strong and bellicose, and their friendship is of great importance. Some god-like qualities come forward as well, e.g. amṛtya "immortality" (in the sense of "utmost vitality"), their abode is the invisible heaven. Their wisdom is great, yet no omniscience. However, we come across some qualities that are intermingled with weakness and failings e.g. their power is combined with tricks and ruse. The amṛtya has been acquired and there is among them an order, with superiors and subjects. They are governed by laws and vrata devānām, and they have to obey.

Some qualities show that they are the object of sacrifices and hymns and that they are the centre of pious thinking. Man has to approach them in purity of heart. This last group of qualities exceeds by far those epithets that point out to divinity in the strict sense and those of purely human character. Moreover they exceed in number as well as in stress. As we meet those human qualities next to sublime ideas, ideas too lofty to be expressed properly in ordinary words, I am under the impression that this third group is decisive for our definition and description of the contents of the concept of deva according to the own ideas of the Indians. That does not mean that the average Indian has never made a sharpcut and principal discrimination between human, and superhuman and divine. Yet, here the task of the Science of Religions obviously lies: to discern the thoughts of the Indians themselves about the term deva rendered in terms comprehensible to us.

Concluding: I believe to be justified in inferring that deva has been considered a superhuman and powerful being who was able to help mankind by his own power.

This personality of deva could be a screen that receives and collects human piety and religious needs, as the strictly Divine Being is too high and too far away from them.

The devas are not men, except in a few respects; they are not God, though they participate in a few traits of his. They are an "in-between", they are superhuman, but subordinate to God. Whether pak, Nitti, Renou render it by "heavenly" cf. 1,164,18; manas, 7,104,18; adbhara, 8,89,1; jyatis, 9,11,2; payas, 7,21,1; andhas.

Conclusions.

Here is a short concluding summary of the work on the RV.

1) The concept of deva has a small but important group of strictly supernatural elements, which certainly could convince us that deva stands for God in the strict sense. To sum up: a) adjectives composed with ṛta or substantive compounds, b) asura for inner value, c) the role of rulers of the universe, d) while at the same time their powers extend over life and death, e) and the quality by which they forgive the sins of man.

But we have to bring against this that those elements do not belong to the concept of deva in general, but adhere as title to the Adityas and above all to Varuṇa (or Varuṇa-Mitra). Some exceptional extension to Indra and Agni may be reckoned as ex ordine quasi-participantium. Personally I have the impression that the Vedic Indian himself has made this discrimination, clearly or vaguely, between deva in general and the Adityas; and that to the Adityas (especially to some of them) may be given the title of God, but not to the term deva qua talis.

2) Another group of components are the purely human qualities the devas seem to possess. Part of them belongs to and has connexion with the cultus, and therefore surely raises the human mind to higher spheres. I may point to terms as: purohita, hotar, dūta and the like. Some other epithets grant the deva a propitious, yet human character: just, benevolent, helpful, prudent, many-sided, liberal and rich in thoughts; and again other epithets provide the devas with the imperfections and weakness of mankind, as they are subject to laws. They are envious, full of hatred at times, ambitious, impatient and given to drink, not to mention their gluttony; they are powerful, yet limited in might. Sometimes we encounter the title deva when given to non-humans, even lifeless things while elsewhere we see deva and man on the same level.

This very large complex of human components in the concept of deva does not allow me to conclude that: deva is equal with God in the strict sense. What one might consider is that those sublime epithets given to the devas, are an exaggerated and superabundant praise, in order to win the devas' favour. But it does not prove that the Vedic Indian truly conceived the devas as gifted with strictly divine qualities. However, we feel inclined as well to consider an important

EXAMINATION OF THE ATHARVA VEDA

In my examination of the term deva in the AV., I have collected a number of passages where the term "devas" has been applied to several of the well-known devas. And it is interesting to notice which of them receives the title oftener in this holy book of the Indians. It is not only interesting but even a bit disappointing as we would perhaps have expected that someone else was taking the record. Savitar is the one that is called deva more often than any one else, AV. 1,29,3: 6,1,1: 19,3: 23,3: 58,1: 99,3: 7,14,1: 3: 10,8,42: 5,14. etc. 1) Then in the Atharva Veda we find a list of about

27,2

19,2

1 as the makers of witchcraft. Only a few times this deva-title is given to Savitar in the AV. The RV. is about its contents — so infrequently mentioned in AV. The RV. is using it over and over again, in fact numberless times. Even less we find Idā, Sarasvatī and Aditi mentioned as devīs. Idā is called "gheefooted, able, soma-backed and belonging to all the gods" (7,27).

Aditi is mentioned as devī (7,6,1: etc.) and receives a whole series of epithets otherwise given to several devas. Some of them are quite impressive, e.g.: triṣe devā aditiḥ "Aditi is all the devas in one".

Pañca janā aditir jātam aditir janitram: "Aditi is the classes of beings, what is born and what is still to be born". In 7,6,2: she is praised as ṛtasya pātnim "spouse of ṛta" (the basis of everything), and śukṣātrām, ajarantīm, urūcīm, supranitīm.

7,65,1: Sarasvatī is called a devī.

Perhaps I may not join the words devāḥ pūrve with deva as a title. But for one reason one could still like to do so as devāḥ pūrve has no epithet whatsoever. Often translated as "gods of old"

5,17,6: 6,64,1: 7,5,1: 11,8,10: but generally speaking we were not able to find any explanation for this title which is not so often used.

The only point that the last quotation shows us, is that the (new) devas inherited supremacy from these devāḥ pūrve from whom they they are creatures or not, is not obvious in RV. Elsewhere it is quite evident that they are. Man felt himself directly dependent upon them and was afraid of the devas. It is therefore that the deva was the centre of religious thinking to the Vedic Indian.

as it is in use from olden times with every kind of tongue and people. It is not without exaggeration, is not without for well known characters as Agni and Savitar, as for waters, plants, herbs and amulets as well. It may demonstrate that they saw some similitude in both genera of beings. It might give us a lead for further interpretation.

3. About the content of the concept of deva, we find first of all times without number that the devas give prosperity. I have put together the terms we could catch with the idea of prosperity, there are subhūtam, gāta "progress", bhagam "fortune", puṣṭe ca poṣe ca "prosperity and abundance". We found the following passages: 1,31,3: 2,34,2: 36,2: 3: 3,10,7: 20,5: 4,25,5: 5,11,11: 6,5,2: 40,2. So we come across other expressions such as "favouring" or "granting"; in short every possible term expressing: to bestow gifts such as: wisdom, force, power, strength, hearing, sight, cf. 2,17,1—6: 3,4,4: 6,111,4: 7,17,1: 19,1: 48,2: 76,6: 97,3: 11,2,28: 12,1,53: 19,43,2: 6: 43,1: 64,1: 3).

Another aspect may be "to bestow property or well-being", cf. 5,3,5: 6,79,1: 3: 7,9,2: 14,1: 17,1: 33,1: 40,2: 46,1: 63,1: 3: 19,3,2: 3: 64,2.

It is to be understood that a country always plagued by famine considers the bestowal of food the greatest gift and so they call the devūtas citvadhāyasas "all-nourishing" (3,22,2:). They call their devas: mayobhū "giver of joy; refreshing" (5,17,1:). They even dare to ask evil pāpman to show this virtue of kindness (6,26,1). The undercurrent of this request is that evil may not visit the one who prays. The devas are often mentioned as giving abhaya "security" (6,40,1:) which we might have to consider as: having nothing to fear and so more like protection than audacity. Vīratādhāyasas devas (17,17,1:).

... (7,48,1: 2:).

The devas are called "givers of kine and progeny", of "protection" and "husbands" of "wives". We shall speak about them under their own headings.

4. Amṛta "full span of life, non-dying, vitality" cfr. chapter I. Sometimes there might occur a slight confusion between amṛta as the gift of vitality and amṛta as potion. But even then we see this beverage as a giver, a bestower of vitality. If we use the term "immortality" it is meant in the sense of "full span of life" etc.

There occur the following aspects:

were born themselves. We may add that "the olden times" always and everywhere receive a wide reverence among nations, as what is old, proved its value and is an example for later coming periods.

Only a few times, not worth mentioning, one finds devas referred to as a group and even so they do not reveal their inmost nature, which is after all the aim of this research.

2. We often find deva as an adjective and then also transformed into daiva(i) and employed in such a way as to suggest exaggeration. One could not help finding this use very important as it shows how easily the term deva or daivī has been used as a very fashionable word. Though shrinking from attributing to deva the epithet of "fashion word" one really receives the impression that in the AV. deva and daivī was very widely used, and that surely in connexion with the magical sphere of the AV. Thus we meet a goat called deva aja ekapād (19,11,3:) Oldenberg (o.c., p. 70) refers to this mysterious being: "Der Ziegenbock wird als Träger aller Wesenheiten, als Stütze von Himmel und Erde beschrieben; er scheint mit seinem einen Fusz ekapād als eine Art tierisch-dämonischer Säule gedacht, auf der das Universum ruht". And Dumont makes an incidental suggestion that Pūṣan may be connected with this god: "if the god Aja Ekapād is a sun god, he perhaps has some connection with the God Pūṣan. I think that possibly the Vedic God Pūṣan, the god who is called the glowing one and who is the husband of the sun-maiden Sūryā, the god who preserves cattle, who is the guardian of the roads and is invoked as a guide, the god, whose chariot is drawn by goats and to whom the goat is consecrated originally was the same as Aja Ekapād, the vegetation spirit identified with the sun and conceived in a goat's shape".

After all AV. is a compilation from several sources. There would be no improbability in accepting that for several powers the compilers had different names in different parts of India and even before their invasion into India.

In 8,5,20: we meet amulets that are called deva, and 6,136,1: gives this tribute to a hair-restorer. In 19,39,6: the aiśvattha is called devasadana whereas in 16,2,6: a mustard seed receives this exalted title and 6,92,3: deva occurs with a steed. So the adjective devī is very often attributed to āpas "the waters" 1,6,1: 3,12,5: 13,3: 6,23,1: and 16,1,13:. Parts of the cow are identical with several devas (9,7,1: 16: 24:). And the sun has to be seen as a deva cf. 13,2,8: 4,4: and 13,2,25: calls the sun devānām adhipatiḥ. In this same passage the earth receives the very same title. In these contexts one does not feel inclined to take the adjective use of deva (viz. daivī) too seriously. Still there is no need to condemn the Indians for exaggeration as it is in use from olden times with every kind of tongue and people. "exaggeration", it is not without for well known characters as Agni and Savitar, as for waters, plants, herbs and amulets as well. It may demonstrate that they saw some similitude in both genera of beings. It might give us a lead for further interpretation.

3. About the content of the concept of deva, we find first of all times without number that the devas give prosperity. I have put together the terms we could catch with the idea of prosperity, as there are subhūtam, gātu "progress", bhagam "fortune", puṣṭe ca poṣe ca "prosperity and abundance". We found the following passages: 1,31,3: 2,34,2: 36,2: 3: 3,10,7: 20,5: 4,25,5: 5,11,11: 6,5,2: 43,2. So we come across other expressions such as "favouring" or "granting"; in short every possible term expressing: to bestow gifts such as: wisdom, forte, power, strength, hearing, sight, cf. 2,17,1—6: 3,4,4: 6,111,4: 7,17,1: 19,1: 48,2: 76,6: 97,3: 11,2,28: 12,1,53: 19,43,2: 6: 43,1: 64,1: 2).

Another aspect may be "to bestow property or well-being", cf. 5,3,5: 6,79,1: 3: 7,9,2: 14,1: 17,1: 33,1: 40,2: 46,1: 68,1: 3: 19,3,2: 3: 64,2.

It is to be understood that a country always plagued by famine considers the bestowal of food the greatest gift and so they call the devāḥ viśvadhāyaḥ "all-nourishing" (3,22,2). They call their devas: maṇobhū "giver of joy; refreshing" (5,17,1). They even dare to ask evil pāpman to show this virtue of kindness (6,26,1). The undercurrent of this request is that evil may not visit the one who prays. The devas are often mentioned as giving abhaya "security" (6,40,1) which we might have to consider as: having nothing to fear and so more like protection than audacity. Viśvarādhatas (7,17,1) "all-nourishing" (7,46,1: 2).

The devas are called "givers of kine and progeny", of "protection" and "husbands" of "wives". We shall speak about them under their own headings.

4. Amṛta "full span of life, non-dying, vitality" cfr. chapter I. Sometimes there might occur a slight confusion between amṛta as the gift of vitality and amṛta as potion. But even then we see this beverage as a giver, a bestower of vitality. If we use the term "immortality" it is meant in the sense of "full span of life" etc.

There occur the following aspects:

a) Apsv antar amṛtam (1,4,4:): "Immortality housed in the waters"; 18,1,32: speaks about the devasya amṛtam; cf. also 3,13,6:.

b) elsewhere we find the devas mentioned as the "immortal ones" (amartyāḥ); cf. 1,31,1: 4,37,12: 6,41,3: 10,3,25: 13,1,44: 18,3,53: Agni is also repeatedly called immortal cf. 7,84,1: and 8,2,13: We find Indra and Agni mentioned as "immortal" 9,3,19: and Rudra 11,2,3:.

c) Devas defend amṛta as their stronghold: devā ita amṛtam rakṣamānāḥ (3,30,7:) and apparently 14,1,64: alludes to the same, cf. also 5,28,11:.

d) Devas have not always been "immortal". They discovered immortality (13,1,7:) and they have attained it once upon a time (2,1,5:). And 19,19,10: suggested something quite different from the devas as a being called "the immortal". They wrapped themselves into "it" cf. 7,17,3:.

e) How did they attain this immortality? 4,35,6: tells us that by an offering of rice amṛta came into being: yasmāt pakevād amṛtam saṁ babhūva. Several other places likewise suggest that the devas received it from a certain plant "kuṣṭha" cf. 5,4,3: 4: and 6,95,2: This kuṣṭha has a double epithet: puṣpa amṛtasya and sadana devānām "seat of the devas".

f) Who is the distributor of Amṛta?

6,1,3: suggests Savitar and 19,64,4: Agni. However 19,43,7: mentions the waters. And again other passages suggest the stars (6,121,3:).

g) We get the impression that somehow and somewhere amṛta has been looked upon as a personality ^{a)} in itself or that one saw a being, invested with immortality, as its essence. It is what von Glasenapp calls in his Entwicklungsstufen des Indischen Denkens: "Daseinsmächte". See 19,19,10: "The gods ascended with the immortal", and 6,26,3: says the immortal one to be thousand-eyed. Again 7,47,2: suggests Kuhū to be devānām amṛtasya patnī, so we have to see in this case amṛta as a person different from devānām. Something similar we might trace in 6,44,3: yet 14,1,61: tells us about the world of "the immortal".

One question is still open: when we hear Sarasvatī named jilū "youngster" (7,57,2:) and Agni yabca "id." cf. 5,12,3: 29,4: 8,1,8: 19,64,2: and Indra yuvā "young man" (6,2,3:) or "longlived" (6,98,2:) and again āyusmant in 6,47,2: 98,2: one might conclude that these terms "long-living" and "young" are a kind of synonym for "immortal", suggesting by different wording the same idea: "extremely vital".

5. The devas did not always have this high dignity of devahood. Has 2,1,5: already taught us that the devas reached amṛta, so 3,22,3: teaches us that: yena devā devatām agra āyan "the devas came once upon a time to devahood". This agre had the content of: before historical times, even before time began. Prof. Gonda in his Inleiding tot het Indische denken *) says: "dit "in den beginne" brengt ons buiten het empirische universum, buiten ons tijdsbegrip, het behoort tot een andere realiteit dan de onze (het woord dat wij aldus vertalen, heeft eigenlijk locale betrekking: op de spits, aan het uitsinde: agre) maar leeft tevens in de onze" ... So 4,14,1: the goat was born from Agni's heat and tens "by means of him (fire)" devā devatām agra āyan. Agre suggests at least "long, long ago" but nevertheless, it has been recorded by Vedic history. Cf. 4,14,1: 4,23,6: Agni has been the person yena devā amṛtam anavatindan. By which, however, I should not like to state that immortality and devahood are identical. But the second part of the same quotation says: "by whom the devas brought heaven", yena devāḥ svar ābharan. And this is a fact, that the devas have heaven as their home. But also from elsewhere we receive proofs that the devas have become what they are and have not been devas from all eternity. 10,9,11: speaking about the cow, she is called the divine throughout the entire 9th sūkta; and stanza 11 says: "the divine one will go to the gods" devān devī. "She is going to the sky and heaven." 10,10,6: "having Parjanya as pati, she goes to the devas". And again 10,10,26: she is called amṛta and is worshipped by devas, manuṣyas, asuras, pitaraḥ, ṛjayaḥ. And 5,17,5: "he becomes a limb of the gods" sa devānām bhātṛy ekam aṅgam.

As far as I can see this "going to" means: "becoming" — just as going to heaven means to take the place of devas and so men are on an equal footing with devas. This surely suggests a certain content of thought in deva, hinting at least at something that is very great, supreme and exalted.

6. The Wisdom of the devas.

The AV. acknowledges the wisdom of the devas everywhere. They are wise, intelligent, knowing: vidvān. They know the ways of the devas: vidvān vāyunaṁ devānām: 2,28,2: cf. also 3,1,1: 2: 2,1: 4,16,1: 39,10: 5,30,14: 6,67,3: 19,59,3.

Elsewhere they are characterized as a group or as individuals: medhāṁ vidvāḥ: "they know wisdom", cf. 6,108,3: or they are working with knowledge or they know: cikitsāḥ cf. 7,47,2.

Of course we find other terms for wise such as: prajānan 3,12,4: 5,29,5: 7,9,1: 14,1,59: or pracetas 4,32,5: 23,1: 5,12,1: 6,45,3: 53,1: 19,59,3: cf. also 7,106,1: 8,3,6: 14,2,46: Pravīdṛān 5,26,1: 3: 9:

6,45,3: So, too, we come across the terms sacetas 1,30,2: 4,26,1: 29,1: 6,68,1: and sajoṣa "unanimous" or "of the same knowledge", cf. 3,22,1: 6,115,1: or saṃmanasaḥ cf. 6,73,1: 74,3:.

We often find the gods called kavi, which is properly "the inspired one, poet", but surely with the undercurrent of "wise" cf. 4,1,7: 5,13,1: or kavikratu 7,14,1: or sukratu "of good insight" 7,14,2: So we encounter prathamadarśa "knowledge that is penetrating (first sight)" and 6,93,3: tells us that Varuṇa is "of purified skill" pūtadaḥṣāḥ. I believe expressions like sahasrākṣa: thousand-eyed (4,20,4: 5: 28,3:) to have the same meaning "of thorough knowledge", just as 13,4,15: tells, about the sun, that he knows the devas.

We find mentioned the knowledge of Varuṇa cf. 5,11,4: 6,97,2: and vipra "wise" or "inspired" of Agni, cf. 6,27,2: 7,71,1: Indra is called vipra 3,3,2: and another aspect of Varuṇa is: "the unerring one" amṛa (5,11,5:). Though we might encounter passages anywhere, where wisdom and intelligence of the devas is praised, they are still nowhere absolutely omniscient. We are able to trace some trends that show us that the Atharvavedic Indian did not believe in omniscience of his devas. Devās te... avidan "the devas come to know" (2,9,4:). With the help of a brahmacārin deva Bṛhaspati discovers his own wife (5,17,5:), and 7,89,2: is a prayer to Indra: "may the gods know me". 15,3,1: shows the devas asking the vrātya after his intention for his tapas. So 19,56,4: tells us that "the fathers nor the gods knew it, whose murmur goes about within here". We found this attribution of vast knowledge to the devas in the RV. and we shall find this everywhere, but nowhere did it become a conviction that the devas were omniscient. Everywhere in RV. and AV. and also in Brāhmaṇas and Upaniṣads, we are told of their knowledge and about the fact that sometimes the devas do not know important things or our innermost thoughts.

7. Devas and Sacrifice.

First of all we treat texts which show us that the devas have at least some connection with sacrifice: 1,20,1: 3,3,1: 10,11: 4,39,10: 7,54,1:.

b) The devas are invited to come to the rites: 1,7,3: 2,35,5: 5,8,3: 11,10,12: 14: 15: 19,3,1: 58,6:.

c) They try to further man's sacrifices and they are asked by human beings to do so cf. 5,12,1: 27,11: 12: 6,39,1:.

d) In prayers accompanying the holy rites, devas are requested to accept the offerings: prati grhṇāhi no haṣiḥ cf. also 3,10,13: 19,27,11: 12: 13: 42,3: 58,6: This acceptance may be the same as to eat those offerings. Often the devas are asked to eat what the sacrificers offer here: haviṣ adantu devāḥ cf. 5,12,11: 7,97,3: 18,3,42: 4,65:.

e) So we see that offerings are really intended for the devas, and it may be that this is the reason why sometimes the devas are called "carriers of sacrifice" (6,114,2:). Texts confirming that the offerings are for the devas: 1,31,1: 3,21,1: 4,21,3: 6,5,1:.. Thus the devas are called yajñiya "worthy of sacrifice" cf. 2,12,2: 34,1: 6,55,3: 7,80,4: 97,2: 11,1,4: 14,2,10: 18,1,26:.. However, we do not meet this expression as often as in the RV. But is not yajatra (6,114,2:) of the same meaning?

f) The devas like sacrifices: devēbhya ... syonam is said of the offerings cf. 5,12,4: 6,125,3: 7,28,1: 46,1: 47,2: 73,3: 77,1: 97,4: 103,1: 109,2: 5: 18,3,53:.

g) Agni, very often called deva himself, sacrifices to the devas cf. 5,12,1:, and so they call him: yajñyān "skilled sacrificer" (5,12,3: 9:). He is the priest of the devas: brahman 12,2,6: 7,62,1:, but also openly hotā devānām cf. also 2,28,2: 3,15,7: 20,5: 21,5: 6,71,1: 2: 123,2: 9,2,6: 10,9,26: 18,1,21: 19,59,3:.. The devas themselves sometimes however, offer their own sacrifices cf. 7,5,3: 6,123,2: 19,6,10: 11:.

But Agni is also the priest of human beings and so they call him "the carrier of sacrifice" or they pray that he may carry the sacrifices of gods and men, cf. 5,8,1: 3: 12,2: 6,123,1: 7,20,7: 78,2: 82,1: 9,5,17: 12,2,8: 18,1,30: 2,34: 3,42: 4,41: 71: 19,4,1:.. He too is the distributor of the offering to the devas 18,2,53: and so they praise him as the "best carrier" vashīṣṭham (4,23,3:) as he conveys the offerings to the gods (because of his being fire). We see devas and sacrifice in a most complicated situation. They accept offerings from human beings, and they sacrifice themselves too as we have noticed above. That is a problem nowhere solved, besides nowhere even felt as a problem. It seems that sacrifice is an action complete in itself.

h) Then AV. tells us: sacrifice is a means and weapon in the hands of the devas: by it they conquer the world 11,10,12:, they beat their enemies with it, 11,10,27: and they go to heaven by its strength 12,3,16:.

i) Moreover, sacrifice is higher than the devas: yajñena yajñam ayajanta devāḥ "by the s. the gods sacrificed to the sacrifice" (7,5,1:) and the following stanza 2 says: Sacrifice devānām adhipatiḥ babbhūta. So 10,8,35 asks: which were the devas that thought themselves higher than sacrifice itself? The answer "no one" is of course to be supplied to this question.

6,45,3: So, too, we come across the terms sacetas 1,30,2: 4,26,1: 29,1: 6,68,1: and sajoṣa "unanimous" or "of the same knowledge", cf. 3,22,1: 6,115,1: or saṃmanasah cf. 6,73,1: 74,3:.

We often find the gods called kavi, which is properly "the inspired one, poet", but surely with the undercurrent of "wise" cf. 4,1,7: 5,13,1: or kavikratu 7,14,1: or sukratu "of good insight" 7,14,2: So we encounter prathamadarśa "knowledge that is penetrating (first sight)" and 6,93,3: tells us that Varuṇa is "of purified skill" pūtadakṣāḥ. I believe expressions like sahasrākṣa: thousand-eyed (4,20,4: 5: 28,3:) to have the same meaning "of thorough knowledge", just as 13,4,15: tells, about the sun, that he knows the devas.

We find mentioned the knowledge of Varuṇa cf. 5,11,4: 6,97,2: and vipra "wise" or "inspired" of Agni, cf. 6,27,2: 7,71,1: Indra is called vipra 3,3,2: and another aspect of Varuṇa is: "the unerring one" amira (5,11,5:). Though we might encounter passages anywhere, where wisdom and intelligence of the devas is praised, they are still nowhere absolutely omniscient. We are able to trace some trends that show us that the Atharvavedic Indian did not believe in omniscience of his devas. Devās te... avidan "the devas come to know" (2,9,4:). With the help of a brahmacārin deva Bṛhaspati discovers his own wife (5,17,5:), and 7,89,2: is a prayer to Indra: "may the gods know me". 15,3,1: shows the devas asking the vrātya after his intention for his tapas. So 19,56,4: tells us that "the fathers nor the gods knew it, whose murmur goes about within here". We found this attribution of vast knowledge to the devas in the RV. and we shall find this everywhere, but nowhere did it become a conviction that the devas were omniscient. Everywhere in RV. and AV. and also in Brāhmaṇas and Upaniṣads, we are told of their knowledge and about the fact that sometimes the devas do not know important things or our innermost thoughts.

7. Devas and Sacrifice.

First of all we treat texts which show us that the devas have at least some connection with sacrifice: 1,20,1: 3,3,1: 10,11: 4,39,10: 7,54,1:.

b) The devas are invited to come to the rites: 1,7,3: 2,35,5: 5,8,3: 11,10,12: 14: 15: 19,3,1: 58,6:.

c) They try to further man's sacrifices and they are asked by human beings to do so cf. 5,12,1: 27,11: 12: 6,39,1:.

d) In prayers accompanying the holy rites, devas are requested to accept the offerings: prati gṛhṇāhi no karṣiḥ cf. also 3,10,13: 19,27,11: 12: 13: 42,3: 58,6: This acceptance may be the same as to eat those

6,40,2: and rescue cf. 6,53,1: 2: 96,1: "tie the enemies" 6,103,1: 104,1: "unfasten the bonds" cf. 6,111,1: 117,1: 119,2: 133,1: and so we find other places as well: cf. 11,6,4: 7: 12: 18: 19: 18,3,25: 19,42,3: 10,10: etc.

2) protection by burning someone i.e. the demons cf. 6,32,1: 34,2: 8,4,1:.

3) protection by killing the opponents cf. 3,1,1—6: 6,2: 8). The devas are called "foe-destroyers" viśādasah cf. 7,77,1:, and prtanāṣāt "overpowerer of fighters"; cf. 5,14,8: 21,11: 7,63,1:. And also "rakṣas-killer" rakṣaḥan: cf. 1,28,1: 16,1: 4,23,3: 7,71,1:.

4) protection by confounding enemies, cf. 3,1,1—6: 2,1: 3: 6,32,3: 67,2:.

5) protection by warding off hostile powers cf. 6,85,1: 2: 97,2: 3: 10,3,2: 5:.

6) protection by confounding people cf. 6,130,4:

7) protection by carrying "evils" ripṛa away cf. 6,51,2: 16,6,11:.

8) some of the devas are called "man-watcher" nṛcakṣaḥ (Agni and Varuna) cf. 1,7,5: 4,16,7: 29,2: 7,110,2: 8,3,9: 17: 17,1,30: and also guardian cf. 11,1,33: or gopā cf. 5,3,2: and "overseer" cf. 5,3,1: 6,34,4: . Afterwards we shall see that hand in hand with this strong belief in the protection and protective powers of the devas goes a great faith in their might and influence upon the forces of nature and foes.

9. The devas have healing power.

Agni is often honoured with cures

Savit
and 2

4,13,2 the epithet of śrīvāṇeśaja "all-healing". Asura is associated with līḥeśaja 2,3,3: and 1,24,2: states āsuri cakre prathame-dam kilāśabheśajam idam "the asura-woman first made this remedy for leprous spot". We hear the Āśvins as physicians 7,53,1: . Elsewhere we hear Agni invoked to throw out the diseases 1,28,1: amiva-cātanah cf. also 7,84,1: and 5,22,1:.

The waters also have this power (1,5,4: and 3,7,5:) and therefore receive the epithet of

The devas prepare

However, I do not accept this healing power of the devas as some special gift along with others. Far more I believe

j) 12,2,8: informs us: sacrifice is a god for the Gods cf. RV. 10,16,9: I found no more of these texts, maybe it is a truly exceptional one. However, it would not be at all surprising if the all-conquering power of sacrifice should be looked upon as a personal power. Thus the Vanaspati "the sacrificial tree" is looked upon as a power that drives away or at least is able to ward off the piśacas (12,3,15:). So we come across many more texts which certainly do imply a kind of personal influence or action. Still another question is, whether the Vedic Indian made a clear distinction between personal and impersonal⁴⁾.

8. Another epithet or characteristic of the devas is their readiness to help. And at the same time the frequency with which the devas are invoked. One may look upon the AV. — and here it agrees with RV. — as a great prayerbook of requests for help, assistance and especially protection. We could split up this idea of helping into the following headings:

a) The devas are helping us 1,6,1: 3,12,5: 20,5: 6,103,2: 7,40,1: They are favouring us or at least asked to do so. Avantu viśve devāḥ cf. 2,13,5: 3,19,5: The Aśvins prepare the road (make it easy to go) 3,3,4: 15,5:; the devas with Indra as a chief go with the army (3,19,6:) and give their help. The Maruts are "helpful" sagmā (4,27,3:). The devas are our "allies" saha devī or sajātis 6,35,2: 59,2: 129,1: 7,50,4: 51,1: 13,1,3:; and they are asked for their help 7,49,1: 19,15,1: 24,7: and 27,1: 2:.

b) Protection and assistance.

This aspect of the devas' power has been of the greatest influence on the Vedic mind. No request occurs so often as this prayer for help and protection, and this aspect is ever so varied. Protection in genere; we meet expressions and terms as sakṣi and ārabh "take hold of me" or jāgrta "be watchful, to be awake for protection". Every deva-personality is asked for protection: Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, the Maruts etc. cf. 1,19,1: 20,2: 3: 21,1: 30,1: 31,3: etc. ⁵⁾.

Other terms are trāy "to rescue" and synonyms and the great number of passages certainly shows us that the Indians saw in their devas a kind of "guardian-angels" to speak in more familiar terms; cf. 4,13,4: 6,3,1: 4,1: 27,1: 2: 3: 45,3: 56,1: 59,2: 93,3: 107,1: etc. ⁶⁾. The facts of this protection are important, as they show, what they expected by the grant and gift of protecting; what they really understood by their request for protection.

1) pramuc "to deliver", including "to give progress, to release from evil". We find cf. 2,34,2: 4: 3,11,1: freedom from foes: cf.

that the Indian thought and still thinks this power to afflict and cure to be a special aspect of the devas' protection against just another enemy, he has daily to cope with. Diseases are still in India the national enemy. No wonder they still look to the devas for their cures and healing.

10. As already has been suggested above, the basis of the Indian conviction that the devas are such powerful helpers and protectors is the strong belief that the devas are so powerful. We hear them mentioned as ugra: "formidable, strong". This term originally is the adjective belonging to the substantive ojas. And this ojas is often said to be "of divine origin" or "dependent on a divine power", and ojas comes from, or belongs to, heaven and earth.

Ugra itself denotes a characteristic or quality of a deva. It is used for Indra and Rudra as well. However we meet ugram also connected with the healing herb, in the meaning of powerful, potent, in a supra-normal way, and so even men can be ugra. Anyhow ojas has to be a mysterious supranormal energy, especially as Indra strengthens himself by ojas cf. also RV. 8,36,3. The term ugra is accompanied by words denoting Indra's excessive fondness for drinking soma. In short ojas seems to be a vital power and a powerful substance inherent in devas and divine beings⁹⁾. This term is to be found in a number of places: 1,10,1: 2: 3,1,2: 16,2: 4,1,5: 19,8: 24,2: (ugrabāhu) 28,3: etc.¹⁰⁾.

The devas are also called "mighty" with many different words. "Husband of might" śacipati cf. 6,82,3: 7,25,1: 54,2: 11,9,23: 13,4,47:.

So vibhu "powerful and vigorous", 4,23,4: 6,33,2: 3: 124,1: 125,3: 7,63,1: 8,3,22: 11,1,6: 18,3,54: And we encounter in 1,35,2: devānām ojaḥ prathamajam hi etat cf. also 7,53,2: 11,10,12: So too we hear the devas called 6,107,1: śatrujāt "all-conqueror" and Pūṣan: "embryo slayer" (6,112,3:) and Soma "lord of fighters" (7,81,3). Indra who is the bridegroom of śaśi "might" cf. 6,82,3: 11,9,23: 13,4,47: is also called with other names; among others we like to quote: c) adhirāja cf. 6,98,2: 19,46,4:

and d) śatruvid "all-gaining" cf. 17,1,11. He is "powerful" śakra cf. 7,86,1: 8,4,21: 13,4,47: he is the "overcomer of heaven" śarjit cf. 17,1,1: and also jetā, jiṇa cf. 6,2,3: and grāmajit cf. 6,97,3: Other epithets are gojit cf. 5,3,11: 6,97,3: dhanajit cf. 5,3,11: and dhanapati cf. 5,23,2: and 5,3,11: praises him as atrujit.

e) The devas are lauded for their strength vān cf. 3,20,7 and 4,38,6: 7: and because of their strength and weapons they are such great heroes vīra and vīrya cf. 1,7,5: 2,5,1: 7,76,6: 86,1: 31,1: and also as śūra cf. 8,8,7: 18,1,38: Indra is armed with the vajra, he is rajin cf. 7,110,1: 2: 18,1,37: cf. chapter 1. Other adjectives expressing their strength: isubhṛtām anīṣṭhau "best shooters" cf. 4,28,2, and tanūpā "selfprotecting" cf. 6,41,3:.

11. Connected with this power for protection is the kindness of the gods, their friendship with which they are always ready in help. They are "friends" mītra cf. 11,9,2: 1,26,2: mītramahas cf. 5,12,1: They are "easily invoked": Anumati 7,20,4: They are ready to help and benevolent cf. 7,14,1: 31,1: 74,4: 19,55,3: and also 6,55,3:; they are bounteous and Indra has maghatan(t) as one of his personal titles, a kind of name: cf. 3,1,3: 19,6: 6,58,1: 31,1: 8,4,19: 7,50,4: 86,1: 18,1,38: 19,15,1: so he is called sudānu "liberal" cf. 7,20,4: and 18,3,61: However he is able to be liberal and to give, for he is very rich cf. 7,12,1: 91,1: 92,1: and he is praised as dhanamjaya cf. 3,14,2:.

So Agni and others are called "lord of treasures" cf. 7,17,4: 19,1: 50,3: 62,1: and the devas are "all-possessing" viśvavedas (6,92,1) or īśvavid (6,107,4):.

12. We now come to other sorts of epithets from which I believe we can easily conclude that the Atharvaveda did not regard the devas as spirits. They are bound to certain regions and they have their own domains. And these regions of the devas are certainly not only to be found in heaven divi or in the sky vyoman cf. 18,4,30:; but also on the earth, in the firmament and even in the herbs and plants cf. 1,30,3: 33,3: 10,9,12: 11,1,37: 6,13: 12: 12,1,20: 2,12: 17,1,13: 19,27,11: 12: 13:.

We read in several places that the devas have heaven as their residence deva te sadhastam cf. 2,2,1: and 18,3,22: or also divi sprīṣṭaḥ (2,2,2:), all devas live above, as they have to come "from above" for partaking in sacrifices; cf. 8,8,13:.

It is identified with the highest firmament cf. 9,10,18: and so the seat of the devas. The devas live there together devāḥ savāsinau 3,29,6: Sometimes we find that the gods are living in a certain part of the body of some yakṣa cf. 10,7,13: 27: or in the breast of the yellow swan cf. 10,8,18: and 13,2,38: The devas live in the cow "much honoured" (10,10,5:), or in the breast of someone not easily to determine "the sun" cf. 13,2,38: 3,14: Anyhow the Indian does not see the devas as pure spirits without any relation to place or material. Viṣṇu for instance traversed the spaces (7,26,1: 10,1,1: etc.), he and Varuna established (7,26,1: 10,1,1: etc.)

(or five) regions of:

they are called: cf.

2,10,4: the prsthās themselves are named devas. And here already we see the lokapālās without this special name 3,26,1: etc. 27,1: etc.

that the Indian thought and still thinks this power to afflict and cure to be a special aspect of the devas' protection against just another enemy, he has daily to cope with. Diseases are still in India the national enemy. No wonder they still look to the devas for their cures and healing.

10. As already has been suggested above, the basis of the Indian conviction that the devas are such powerful helpers and protectors is the strong belief that the devas are so powerful. We hear them mentioned as ugra: "formidable, strong". This term originally is the adjective belonging to the substantive ojas. And this ojas is often said to be "of divine origin" or "dependent on a divine power", and ojas comes from, or belongs to, heaven and earth.

Ugra itself denotes a characteristic or quality of a deva. It is used for Indra and Rudra as well. However we meet ugram also connected with the healing herb, in the meaning of powerful, potent, in a supernatural way, and so even men can be ugra. Anyhow ojas has to be a mysterious supranormal energy, especially as Indra strengthens himself by ojas cf. also RV. 8,36,3. The term ugra is accompanied by words denoting Indra's excessive fondness for drinking soma. In short ojas seems to be a vital power and a powerful substance inherent in devas and divine beings²⁹). This term is to be found in a number of places: 1,10,1: 2: 3,1,2: 16,2: 4,1,5: 19,8: 24,2: (ugrabāhu) 28,3: etc.³⁰).

The devas are also called "mighty" with many different words. "Husband of might" śacipati cf. 6,82,3: 7,25,1: 54,2: 11,9,23: 13,4,47:.

So vibhu "powerful and vigorous", 4,23,4: 6,33,2: 3: 124,1: 125,3: 7,63,1: 8,3,22: 11,1,6: 18,3,54: . And we encounter in 1,35,2: devānām ojaḥ prathamajant hu etat cf. also 7,53,2: 11,10,12: . So too we hear the devas called 6,107,1: vīravat "all-conqueror" and Pūtan: "embryo slayer" (6,112,3:) and Soma "lord of fighters" (7,81,3:). Indra who is the bridegroom of śacī "might" cf. 6,82,3: 11,9,23: 13,4,47: is also called with other names; among others we like to quote: c) adhrāja cf. 6,98,2 19,46,4:

and d) sarvavid "all-gaining" cf. 17,1,11: . He is "powerful" śakra cf. 7,86,1: 8,4,21: 13,4,47: , he is the "overcomer of heaven" svarjit cf. 17,1,1: and also jetā, ijāna cf. 6,2,3: and grāmajit cf. 6,97,3: . Other epithets are gojit cf. 5,3,11: 6,97,3: dhanajit cf. 5,3,11: and dhanapati cf. 5,23,2: and 5,3,11: praises him as atapati.

e) The devas are lauded for their strength vājin cf. 3,20,7. and 4,38,6: 7: and because of their strength and weapons they are such great heroes vīra and vīrya cf. 1,7,5: 2,3,1: 7,76,6: 86,1: 31,1: and also as jūra cf. 8,8,7: 18,1,38: . Indra is armed with the vajra, he is

13. Another "duty" of the devas, especially Agni's, is that of dūta "messenger" cf. 1,7,6: 3,2,1: 4,3: 4,13,3: 5,12,1: etc. We must view this aspect of Agni and Vāta in connection with the office of being a priest for human and divine beings so that their task of messenger will mean that they are carriers of offerings.

14. Generally speaking the Indians did not recognize any omniscience or omnipresence in their devas and no omnipotence either. They are still "growing in power" vardh cf. 1,29,1: 3: 2,6,1: 6,5,3: 7,29,2: "by good praise", 14,1,37: "they grow by water and honey", cf. also 15,1,4: 5: 17,1,14: 18,3,22:. Elsewhere we read that they increase pravṛddha cf. 4,26,2: 5,28,4:. They increase and grow by the help of the ancestors and fathers cf. 18,1,47: and so we hear too that: 1,8,4 brahmanā vāvṛdhānah "Agni grows by liturgical acts". Elsewhere we read (18,1,33:) that the songs of praise śloka are a spell over them.

15. A few adjectives not so frequently used for the devas, but still showing the great respect of the Indians for his devas: paramēṣṭhin and the like "exalted one" (1,7,2: 18,1,34:) vandita "revered one" (1,7,1:) bhadra "excellent" (3,13,5:). In short they believed very strongly in the importance of the favour of the devas cf. 6,47,2: 7,97,2: etc. and in practically every hymn this conviction speaks explicitly or implicitly.

16. Reading through the entire AV. we found nowhere explained the distinction between devas, asuras, and human beings as essential or substantial. We find them mentioned one after the other, so that we doubt whether the authors see any real difference between devas, asuras, manuṣyas, where sometimes ṛṣi may be found added cf. 4,16,8: 28,5: 30,3: 8,9,24: 10,9,9: 11,1,5: and 16: 12,2,17: 19,9,11:. So we find brāhmaṇas, ṛṣi, devas cf. 6,12,1: 13,1: 11,4,16: 5,1: 2: 3: 5: 19: and we come across godfolk, men, all beings 6,19,1:, and 6,20,2: however, is a sūkta pronounced in order to ward off fever, and therein we find Varuna on the same level as Rudra, fever, antarikṣa and prthivī "the earth". In 6,33,3: we meet Indra among people as the most powerful and again in 7,53,7: they pray: "that they — devaṃ devatrā — have highest brightness". 8,8,15: shows Gandharvas, Apsarases, serpents, devas, puṇyajāna "pure folks" renders Whitney, and fathers, all on the same level. The devas and the fathers are practically of the same importance cf. 6,123,3: 11,8,29:, even the cows (called devī as well) cf. 7,75,2:. So the "priests" ṛṣi, who are the devas cf. 8,9,21: 19,11,5: 58,6: 62,1:. So we find breath and the devas mentioned together cf. 11,4,16: where even the

As we mentioned above the Indians did not think their devas to be pure spirits. Whatever they might be, they behave like human beings. They come into being through father, mother and their wives cf. 2,1,3: 5,11,11: 6,38,1: 81,3: 7,2,1: 46,3: 47,2: 49,1: 2: 80,3: 18,1,25: 31: 19,53,8: 57,3: 58,6: And 2,1,3: speaks about nāmadha "father" as acknowledger of his children.

There are "sons" cf. 1,30,2: 3,10,13: 6,1,1: 58,3: 7,2,1: and there are "daughters" cf. 3,31,5: 6,82,2: 100,3: and "sisters" cf. 5,5,1: 6,46,2: 100,3: and other relations as well bandhu cf. 5,11,11: 7,2,1: and implicitly the same is said in 4,1,6: eṣa jāpīe bahubhiḥ sākam itihā "he was born together with many thus".

They came into being by birth cf. 1,7,6: 33,1: (Savitar) 3,20,1: "by way of a yoni" 4,1,3: 6: 23,4: 5,4,7: 6,34,5 (Agni) and Indra and others in 7,84,2: 11,8,3: 19,3,1: 6,16: Births are mentioned in 2,28,2: 4,1,3: 13,3,21: 18,3,23: Somehow the birth of the devas is a bit particular cf. 4,11,6: And so along the family line clans have formed themselves daśoir viśaḥ cf. 9,4,9: devajana 11,9,2: 11,9,5: 26: 10,5: 13,3,20: 15,3,10: Some passages named the devas tapojā "born from tapas" or 19,10,2: occurs "often-born". They make a difference between younger and older, kāmā was first-born 9,2,19: and elsewhere Agni is the "young one" yuvā and also Sarasvatī liṣu.

And even intercourse is related to between the devas in 14,2,32: Quite openly is revealed that lust and desire for children is part of their lives cf. 6,81,3: Aditi desires a son; 9,2,19: kāma "lust" was first born, cf. also 19,4,4: 52,3:.

Kāma is called "mighty" (19,52,1—5:), "shining" vibhāvan, "formidable" agra and overpowering, but interestingly nowhere deva. So quite clearly AV. shows us that there is no question of self-sufficiency in being; they really came into existence cf. 15,14,1—11:.

Concluding we do not see that the Indians thought anything special of the birth of the devas. They even do not appeal to a particular way of delivery except, 4,11,6: Yena devāḥ svar ānurahur bitvā sarīram any problem in it and did not need any super-natural way for the devas. He did not even express the conviction that the devas were in origin absolutely different from us.

20. Speaking about Varuṇa as rāja, we find this title often also with other devas e.g. 4,1,3: Bṛhaspati samrāt: 5,24,1—14: adhipatis cf. also 6,10,1—3: Agni 6,36,3: further other devas cf. 6,86,2: 3: 119,1: 123,5: We meet Indra, often called viśāmpati (1,21,1:) especially Soma has the title of King in the AV. cf. 3,20,4: 6,99,3:

and devas, but this clear insight has been confused sometimes by lack of knowledge of the age of several passages in the AV. and also by lack of real knowledge of the historical or political background of some Atharvavedic texts. And especially here, where it refers to the relation between asuras and devas, we are really at a complete loss to understand what asuras were in reality or were in the minds of the Indians. Some places tell us, that the asuras were governing the devas. Their king is Varuṇa and he rules over Asuras and devas as well cf. 1,10,1: Varuṇa is called here ayam devānām asuraḥ, which implies that Varuṇa is an asura par excellence and reigns rājasi over both of them cf. 5,11,1: mahe Asurāja. Varuṇa has the title of king rājā or rājate throughout the entire AV. cf. 1,10,1: 33,2¹¹). Yet Varuṇa is called mahādeva and rājā 5,21,11: and 6,51,3: gives him the title of deva cf. also 1,10,1: 5,11,11: All this could imply that devas and asuras were synonyms or different titles for groups of the same beings. But other texts, I should say, force us to accept a real difference. We refer to our RV. chapter; some traits, though, are far more widely treated in this AV. part. So 15,2,2—4: implies a certain difference by mentioning the ādityas (elsewhere usually named asuras) next to the group of devas. So 6,109,3: where totally opposite actions are told about asuras and devas, implying a kind of opposition and counter-acting. 6,141,3: could point to the same, but is not strictly convincing. 3,9,4: devā itvāsuramāyayā "go ye about like gods with asura magic" implying asuras to be a bit more important or mightier than the devas. 19,56,3: gives a much clearer discrimination. 4,8,3: tells us so impressively about Asura (probably Varuṇa) as never in connection with any deva: mahat tad vṛṇo asurasya nāmā vīśvarūpo amṛtāni tatthau "great is the name of the virile Asura: having all forms, he approached to immortal beings". 4,15,12: calls Varuṇa asuraḥ pitā.

And throughout the entire AV. Varuṇa retains this position of king and exalted asura, though the asuras as group are losing theirs. It is not the king that gets destroyed but his subjects and he will have afterwards the same kingly place with his former enemies, the devas. 2,27,3: 4: Indro ha cakre tṛā bāhāv asurebhyo statīsatē "Indra put thee on his arm, in order to lay low the asuras" and 6,7,3 asks: yena devā asurāṇām oṣāmsy avṛmudhām "By what, O devas, did you repel the might of the asura"; cf. also 12,1,5 and in 8,6,5: the asuras take the same position as the dævas in Persia: they are black, hairy, snouted (tundṣka). The very same story we meet afterwards in Chāndogya Upaniṣad and Bṛhad Aranyaka Upaniṣad, but there the treatment of the asuras is even worse and more contemptuous.

19. Sex relationship among the devas.

As we mentioned above the Indians did not think their devas to be pure spirits. Whatever they might be, they behave like human beings. They come into being through father, mother and their wives cf. 2,1,3: 5,11,11: 6,38,1: 81,3: 7,2,1: 46,3: 47,2: 49,1: 2: 80,3: 18,1,25: 31: 19,53,8: 57,3: 58,6: And 2,1,3: speaks about nāmadha "father" as acknowledger of his children.

There are "sons" cf. 1,30,2: 3,10,13: 6,1,1: 58,3: 7,2,1: and there are "daughters" cf. 3,31,5: 6,82,2: 100,3: and "sisters" cf. 5,5,1: 6,46,2: 100,3: and other relations as well bandhu cf. 5,11,11: 7,2,1: and implicitly the same is said in 4,1,6: esa jāpī bahubhiḥ sākam itthā "he was born together with many thus".

They came into being by birth cf. 1,7,6: 33,1: (Savitar) 3,20,1: "by way of a yoni" 4,1,3: 6: 23,4: 5,4,7: 6,34,5 (Agni) and Indra and others in 7,84,2: 11,8,3: 19,3,1: 6,16: Births are mentioned in 2,28,2: 4,1,3: 13,3,21: 18,3,23: Somehow the birth of the devas is a bit particular cf. 4,11,6: And so along the family line clans have formed themselves daivir vilah cf. 9,4,9: devajana 11,9,2: 11,9,5: 26: 10,5: 13,3,20: 15,3,10: Some passages named the devas tapojā "born from tapas" or 19,10,2: occurs "often-born". They make a difference between younger and older, kāmā was first-born 9,2,19: and elsewhere Agni is the "young one" yuvā and also Sarasvatī liṣu.

And even intercourse is related to between the devas in 14,2,32: Quite openly is revealed that lust and desire for children is part of their lives cf. 6,81,3: Aditi desires a son; 9,2,19: kāma "lust" was first born, cf. also 19,4,4: 52,3:.

Kāma is called "mighty" (19,52,1—5:), "shining" vibhāvan, "formidable" agra and overpowering, but interestingly nowhere deva. So quite clearly AV. shows us that there is no question of self-sufficiency in being; they really came into existence cf. 15,14,1—11:.

Concluding we do not see that the Indians thought anything special of the birth of the devas. They even do not appeal to a particular way of delivery except, 4,11,6: Yena devāḥ svar āturubur hitvā larīram amṛtasya nābhīm, but this single passage certainly does not prove that the Atharvavedic Indian knew about a supernatural birth just for the use of the gods. Even this might prove that the Indians never saw any problem in it and did not need any super-natural way for the devas. He did not even express the conviction that the devas were in origin absolutely different from us.

20. Speaking about Varuna as rājā, we find this title often also with other devas e.g. 4,1,5: Bṛhaspati samrāj: 5,24,1—14: adhipatis cf. also 6,10,1—3: Agni 6,36,3: further other devas cf. 6,86,2: 3: 119,1: 123,5: We meet Indra, often called tīlāmpati (1,21,1: especially Soma has the title of King in the AV. cf. 3,20,4: 6,99,3:

and devas, but this clear insight has been confused sometimes by lack of knowledge of the age of several passages in the AV. and also by lack of real knowledge of the historical or political background of some Atharvavedic texts. And especially here, where it refers to the relation between asuras and devas, we are really at a complete loss to understand what asuras were in reality or were in the minds of the Indians. Some places tell us, that the asuras were governing the devas. Their king is Varuṇa and he rules over Asuras and devas as well cf. 1,10,1: Varuṇa is called here ayam devānām asuraḥ, which implies that Varuṇa is an asura par excellence and reigns rājati over both of them cf. 5,11,1: mahe Asurāya. Varuṇa has the title of king rājā or rājate throughout the entire AV. cf. 1,10,1: 33,2¹¹). Yet Varuṇa is called mahādeva and rājā 5,21,11: and 6,51,3: gives him the title of deva cf. also 1,10,1: 5,11,11: All this could imply that devas and asuras were synonyms or different titles for groups of the same beings. But other texts, I should say, force us to accept a real difference. We refer to our RV. chapter; some traits, though, are far more widely treated in this AV. part. So 15,2,2—4: implies a certain difference by mentioning the ādityas (elsewhere usually named asuras) next to the group of devas. So 6,109,3: where totally opposite actions are told about asuras and devas, implying a kind of opposition and counter-acting. 6,141,3: could point to the same, but is not strictly convincing. 3,9,4: devā ivāsuramāyayā "go ye about like gods with asura magic" implying asuras to be a bit more important or mightier than the devas. 19,56,3: gives a much clearer discrimination. 4,8,3: tells us so impressively about Asura (probably Varuṇa) as never in connection with any deva: mahat tad viṣṇo asurāya nāmā tvivarūpo amṛtāni tasthau "great is the name of the virile Asura: having all forms, he approached to immortal beings". 4,15,12: calls Varuṇa asuraḥ pitā.

And throughout the entire AV. Varuṇa retains this position of king and exalted asura, though the asuras as group are losing theirs. It is not the king that gets destroyed but his subjects and he will have afterwards the same kingly place with his former enemies, the devas. 2,27,3: 4: Indro ha cakre tvā bāhāv asurebhyo staritate "Indra put thee on his arm, in order to lay low the asuras" and 6,7,3: asks: yena devā asurāṇām oḥṃsy atṛnubham "By what, O devas, did you repel the might of the asura"; cf. also 12,1,5. and in 8,6,5: the asuras take the same position as the daccas in Persia: they are black, hairy, snouted (unṣika). The very same story we meet afterwards in Chāndogya Upaniṣad and Bṛhad Aranyaka Upaniṣad, but there the treatment of the asuras is even worse and more contemptuous.

19. Sex relationship among the devas.

100 "autumn" or the "giving of long life", or ekātha parase "carry him to old age" and 5,30,14: We do not hear them often ask for a long life, but for the "length of life". And this span of lifetime is reckoned nowadays to be about 120 years, as Mahātmā Gandhi said about 6 weeks before his death.

They have power over sickness and death (2,12,4:) harasā dai-vyena cf. also 3,9,1:.

b) They have power over cattle cf. 2,26,1: 19,63,1: and Viṣṇu is called the "unhurtful shepherd" (7,26,5:). They even give "immortality" which means "the full span of life" 7,106,1: 118,1: cf. also 10,2,14: They give to a man his wife cf. 3,25,6: 6,60,1: etc. (Aryaman) 82,2: 3: 2,30,2: (Aśvins) cf. also 6,130,1: etc. 131,1: etc. 14,1,50:; so they give a husband to a woman cf. 2,36,1: 3: and 14,2,1: and they are the creators of the body 10,2,4: 5: 8:.

c) The devas have authority and dominion over everything so e.g. apṛas have mastery over every desirable thing cf. 1,5,4: īānā vāry-ānām; the deeper meaning of 2,30,2: may be the same, where the Aśvins are said to be able to dispose of everything. 3,8,4: introduces the devas as the gopā "herdsmen and lords of prosperity". 3,8,1: says that the devas give "authority": bṛhad rāṣṭram... dadhātu and 6,87,1: introduces Indra in the same quality.

The devas rule the earth: bhūpati or bhuvanasya pati or bhūtapati cf. 1,31,1: 2,2,1 2: 14,4: 3,10,9: 6,79,1: 7,17,1: 10,5,45: So they rule over human beings as well kṣayantīḥ carṣaṇīnām cf. 1,5,4: 2,26,3 36,3: (Agni and Soma) 6,138,2: 4: (Indra and others). They give their laws and orders dharma cf. 7,24,1: 25,2: 26,5: 18,1,5: 7:; they have power over the human mind and heart. So the Indians pray to the devas in their love-sadness that the devas might change the heart and mind of their beloved cf. 3,25,6: vy asyai Mitra Varuṇa bṛdāḥ cittaṇy asyatam: "do ye Mitra Varuṇa cast out the intents from her heart", cf. also 6,130,4: cf. also 6,131,1: 132,1: 14,1,32:.

d) The devas have power over the firmament and the elements. dyauḥ astu, sūryo, agnib... hranyam, nākam adhi rohaya "be there light, sun, fire, gold make this man ascend" (1,9,2:) and 3,3,1: tvāṇā rodasi vṛcī "bend apart the wide firmament (and the earth)". The dhītar sustains the earth, the sky and the sun (6,60,3:), see 104,3: 19,20,1: 24,4: We meet some devas praised as svadhānt "self-ruling" cf. 4,1,7: 5,11,4: 5: 11: 18,1,26: sometimes as vidhant "disposer" with others cf. 3,16,2: 13,4,3: etc.

They are "full of majesty" yajāsvin cf. 6,39,2: 3: 58,2: 3: and daśra 7,73,2: and tanūvasin "self-controlling" cf. 4,4,4: 24,7: They called themselves "handless" nairhastā to show their power (6,65,2: 3:) and elsewhere "gold-handed" cf. 3,21,8: 7,14,2: 115,2: or also "well-handed" subāhus cf. 7,46,2:.

Other descriptions of the devas reveal their kindheartedness and their pleasant nature. They amuse themselves easily cf. 6,73,2: 7,35,1: 118,1:, they are pleasant syonah cf. 4,27,3: and cf. 6,62,2: or juṣṭa (5,7,4:) and also "honeyspeched" (5,7,4:) Indra's gladness is great (6,33,1:).

All this proves the great respect the Indians had for their devas. We shall give now a last series of epithets and qualities belonging to them in which we even may consider a much higher esteem. It points into the direction of a true God.

21. The devas forgive sins: devā muñcanto asṛjan nir enataḥ or else in the edition of Shankar Pandurang (1895): devā muñcantah asṛjan ni enas, cf. 2,10,8: 6,113,1: 3: 114,1: 2: 115,1: 117,1: 3: cf. also 6,111,3: 4: etc. The following texts assign this epithet to Agni 3,15,4: 6,45,2: 62,1: So one asked (in 19,40,1:) Bṛhaspati for amendment of sin; and also Varuna cf. 13,3,21:, and 19,44,8: is asked for the same. So the Maruts 7,77,3: And 14,2,59—62 prays "let Agni and Savitar release us from that sin". Even herbs are requested to forgive sins by power of the devas cf. 6,96,2: Sometimes the devas are asked "to purify us" cf. 6,47,1: 51,1—3: 119,3:, also in the same texts Varuna is commanded to do the same, and Agni 6,62,1: and all the gods 6,19,1: 2:; so is Savitar 6,19,3:.

There is still another aspect to this: the devas "hate" the sinner, the selfish man, who is only concerned about himself cf. 3,31,1:; and so they punish the sinner 5,18,5: 8: 13: and "may we not fight with the mind of the gods" 7,52,2: 17:).

22. Another prerogative ascribed to the devas is their power over life and death, their dominion over human beings, over the sky and the elements and over the human mind and human heart.

a) Power over life and death.

They give life and therefore are called ātmasdā cf. 4,2,1: or āyurdā cf. 2,13,1: 4: to Agni 2,17,4: for conception 5,25,1: to Dhātār 7,17,2:.

They give children or the possibility of conception cf. 3,23,6: 6,11,3: 7,33,1: 46,1: 68,3: 89,2: 14,1,54: 2,1: 19,63,1: The Indians pray to the gods for a good delivery: garbham samairayantām vy āṇuṣṭantī sūtaḥ "send the foetus and let them unclothe for delivery"; cf. 1,11,2: 3,23,6: 6,81,3: They give a long life, very often called 100 "autumns" or the like. We find several aspects and nuances in this "giving of long life", m e.g. 2,28,2: 5: "let not friends slay him, nor his enemies"), or vāhātha jarasē "carry him to old age" cf. 1,30,2: 3: and 5,30,14: We do not hear them often ask for a long life, but for the "length of life". And this span of lifetime is reckoned nowadays to be about 120 years, as Mahātmā Gandhi said about 6 weeks before his death.

They have power over sickness and death (2,12,4:) harasā dai-vyena cf. also 3,9,1:.

b) They have power over cattle cf. 2,26,1: 19,63,1: and Viṣṇu is called the "unhurful shepherd" (7,26,5:). They even give "immortality" which means "the full span of life" 7,106,1: 118,1: cf. also 10,2,14: They give to a man his wife cf. 3,25,6: 6,60,1: etc. (Aryaman) 82,2: 3: 2,30,2: (Aśvins) cf. also 6,130,1: etc. 131,1: etc. 14,1,30:; so they give a husband to a woman cf. 2,36,1: 3: and 14,2,1: and they are the creators of the body 10,2,4: 5: 8:.

c) The devas have authority and dominion over everything so e.g. āpas have mastery over every desirable thing cf. 1,5,4: līlānā vāry-āṇām; the deeper meaning of 2,30,2: may be the same, where the Aśvins are said to be able to dispose of everything. 3,8,4: introduces the devas as the gopā "herdsmen and lords of prosperity". 3,8,1: says that the devas give "authority": bṛhad rāṣṭram... dadhātu and

... 7,17,1: 10,5,40: So they rule over human beings as well kṣyantīḥ carṣaṇinām cf. 1,5,4: 2,26,3: 16,3: (Agni and Soma) 6,138,2: 4: (Indra and others). They give their laws and orders dharma cf. 7,24,1: 25,2: 26,5: 18,1,5: 7: they have power over the human mind and heart. So the Indians pray to the devas in their love-sadness that the devas might change the heart and mind of their beloved cf. 3,25,6: vy ariyai Mitra Varuṇa hrdsā cittāny ariyatari: "do ye Mitra Varuṇa cast out the intents from her heart", cf. also 6,130,4: cf. also 6,131,1: 132,1: 14,1,32:.

d) The devas have power over the firmament and the elements. īyati aitu, sūryo, agnib... hiranyama, nākara adhi rohaya "be there 1,4,1: sun, fire, gold: make this man ascend" (1,9,2:) and 3,3,1: vyatarta rodasi mūci "bend apart the wide firmament (and the earth)". The dhātav sustains the earth, the sky and the sun (6,60,3:), see also 6,69,3: although it might be open to another interpretation as well, "Let Prajāpati fix that in me, as the heaven in the sky"; cf. 6,100,1: 2:.

The devas maintain everything: devā uttarasmim jyotiṣi dhārayantu (1,9,1:) cf. 19,58,2: about Bṛhaspati. They maintained security: kṣemam adidharan (3,3,5:) Pṛthivī maintains trees, mountains and also the expecting mother and her child cf. 6,17,1—4: and Agni and Soma are requested to maintain their supremacy 6,54,2:. The context of 1,13,4: implies that the devas have created the thunderstorm and lightnings. This passage uses asṛjanta, but 1,33,3: uses the word kr- krṇvanti cf. also 13,3,1: 15:. So Prajāpati generates offspring prajā 7,19: . In his workshop Tvaṣṭar generates the woman (6,78,3:) and Agni the sun. He is also the principle from which the devas produce the entire creation cf. 13,1,25:. The same devas created also the sun 13,3,12: and again 19,17,9: praises Prajāpati for his enormous generative power prajānanavān "having creative strength". It might be observed in passing that there is no clear evidence to allow the conclusion that, according to the Indians, the devas did create ex nihilo i.e. sine praesistente materia. After all sṛj- means still "to send out" and kr- means just the "making of a thing". According to 3,8,1: Mitra arranges the seasons ṛtubhiḥ kalpamānaḥ and the uniting of the earth with the "ruddy ones" (the sun? etc.). 3,31,7: by their breath the gods set in motion the sun: prāṇeṇa tvīṣatovīryam devāḥ sūryam samai- rayan and 4,36,5: ye devāḥ tena hānante sūryeṇa numate jātām "the gods hasten with him, they measure the speed with the sun". So lightning and thunder are the signs of the devas 7,11:.

I believe these few quotations prove that the Indians were convinced that some of their devas had a more than normal power or, to be as sharp as possible, that their powers — maybe still natural — still do surpass the power of nature.

23. Another indication in that same direction of Supreme Being is the relationship between devas and ṛta. In the RV. section we gave a somewhat longer discussion of it. That may suffice here as well. We meet the composita and derivatives far less in AV. than in RV. We come across prathamajam ṛtasya "firstborn of righteousness" cf. 2,1,4: (Agni) 4,35,1: (Prajāpati) 5,17,1: (Matarīśvan) 6,122,1: (Viśvakarman) 8,9,21: (the devas as group) 18,2,15: (Yama's messengers).

We find some derivatives as ṛtāvri cf. 3,13,7: 6,36,1 where we find ṛtasya pati as well, further also ṛtāvri cf. e.g. 6,36,2: Cf. 18,2,15: We come across ṛtāvriḥ "increasers of ṛta" cf. 4,29,1: 11,6,19: 20: 18,2,15: and in 6,22,1: we hear "they have come from the seat of ṛta".

Another expression, used here of Varuṇa, is satyāṇte avapāyaṃ cf. 1,33,2: "he is looking (as a judge) at truth and falsehood". 6,1,2: praises Savitar as satya sūmā and 3,16,3: praises Bhāga as satyarādhas "of true bestowal".

7,6,2: occurs Aditi, mother of the Adityas i.e. Varuṇa, Mitra, Bhāga, called "spouse of ṛta": ṛtasya patnī. I might be mistaken, but in these quotations with ṛta, a somewhat more elevated feeling and a less materialistic tone could be felt. Something of the absoluteness of law and right eternal.

One point more is to be added: sometimes we do find a request for blessing from Agni so asmasbhyam adhi bravat (1,16,1), or from Indra 1,16,2: and Varuṇa. So also from the devas cf. 4,8,2:, and 18,3,10: the fathers are asked to anoint us with splendour and also the devas with ghee and honey.

24. After these characteristics of devas and asuras, objectivity demands that we throw some light on the ideas the Indians had in the AV. period about amulets and their so-called "powerful herbs".

a) The Amulets.

Some texts force the reader to believe that the Atharvavedic Indians had more faith in their amulets than in their devas. Indra is increased (in power) by a certain amulet maṇḍā yenendro abhivāṇḍhe cf. 1,29,1: and it is even able to protect against devas and asuras (4,10,5:) and against Gandharvas and Apsarases (19,36,6:) also 8,7,2: stresses this protection against devas ").

Elsewhere it says that an amulet has been made by deva and men cf. 5,14,7: devakṛtā va paraṇāḥ kṛtā (maṇi) and 10,6,32: tells us that the devas and ṛtāras and men always depend upon this amulet i.e. the destruction of the Asuras cf. 10,6,22:. The devas needed it in their battles (10,3,2:), also against the asuras (10,3,5: 11:) and in 19,30,3: and amulet of darbha is called: devavarman "defence of the gods" and 19,33,4: calls it "strength of the gods". A similar statement is found in 19,35,2:.

These amulets are given (2,4,4:) or approved by the devas 1,35,4: devas dattāna. Their power is ojo devānām cf. 3,5,1: 3: 19,33,4: cf. also 5,14,3:. Also in 10,6,5: where we hear that the amulet comes from the devas. At times there is cooperation between devas and the amulets; several passages relate to us that the amulet has been devakṛtā "born from the gods" cf. 10,6,31: 19,32,7: 33,6: 34,6:.

Another point is that quite a number of adjectives, in other hymns, applied to the devas, occur here with the amulets, for instance "life-giving" 8,2,4: 1,35,1: 19,28,1: 32,1: 33,1: 37,2:. They are called also 6,69,3: although it might be open to another interpretation as well, "Let Prajāpati fix that in me, as the heaven in the sky"; cf. 6,100,1: 2:.

The devas maintain everything: devā uttarasmim jyotiṣi dhārayantu (1,9,1:) cf. 19,58,2: about Brhaspati. They maintained security: kṣemam adidharan (3,3,5:) Pṛthivī maintains trees, mountains and also the expecting mother and her child cf. 6,17,1—4: and Agni and Soma are requested to maintain their supremacy 6,54,2:. The context of 1,13,4: implies that the devas have created the thunderstorm and lightnings. This passage uses asṛjanta, but 1,33,3: uses the word kr-: kr̥vanti cf. also 13,3,1: 15:. So Prajāpati generates offspring prajā 7,19:. In his workshop Tvaṣṭar generates the woman (6,78,3:) and Agni the sun. He is also the principle from which the devas produce the entire creation cf. 13,1,25:. The same devas created also the sun 13,3,12: and again 19,17,9: praises Prajāpati for his enormous generative power prajānanavān "having creative strength". It might be observed in passing that there is no clear evidence to allow the conclusion that, according to the Indians, the devas did create ex nihilo i.e. sine praejacente materia. After all sṛj- means still "to send out" and kr- means just the "making of a thing". According to 3,8,1: Mītra arranges the seasons ṛtubhiḥ kalpamānaḥ and the uniting of the earth with the "ruddy ones" (the sun? etc.). 3,31,7: by their breath the gods set in motion the sun: prāṇeṇa vīśvato viryaṃ devāḥ sūryaṃ samai-rayan and 4,36,5: ye devāḥ tena hāsante sūryeṇa rumate jayam "the gods hasten with him, they measure the speed with the sun". So lightning and thunder are the signs of the devas 7,11:.

I believe these few quotations prove that the Indians were convinced that some of their devas had a more than normal power or, to be as sharp as possible, that their powers — maybe still natural — still do surpass the power of nature.

23. Another indication in that same direction of Supreme Being is the relationship between devas and ṛta. In the RV. section we gave a somewhat longer discussion of it. That may suffice here as well. We meet the composita and derivatives far less in AV. than in RV. We come across prathamajam ṛtasya "firstborn of righteousness" cf. 2,1,4: (Agni) 4,35,1: (Prajāpati) 5,17,1: (Matarisvan) 6,122,1: (Viśvakarman) 8,9,21: (the devas as group) 18,2,15: (Yama's messengers).

We find some derivatives as ṛtatuṣi cf. 3,13,7: 6,36,1 where we find ṛtasya pati as well, further also ṛtātman cf. e.g. 6,36,2:. Cf. 18,2,15: We come across ṛtāvādh "increasers of ṛta" cf. 4,29,1: 11,6,19: 23: 18,2,15: and in 6,22,1 we hear "they have come from the seat of ṛta".

Another expression, used here of Varuna, is satyāṁṛte avapāiyam cf. 1,33,2: "he is looking (as a judge) at truth and falsehood". 6,1,2: praises Savitar as satya sūnu and 3,16,3: praises Bhāga as satyarādhas "of true bestowal".

7,6,2: occurs Aditi, mother of the Adityas i.e. Varuna, Mitra, Bhāga, called "spouse of ṛta": ṛtasya pātnī. I might be mistaken, but in these quotations with ṛta, a somewhat more elevated feeling and a less materialistic tone could be felt. Something of the absoluteness of law and right eternal.

One point more is to be added: sometimes we do find a request for blessing from Agni so aśmabhyam adhi bravat (1,16,1:), or from Indra 1,16,2: and Varuna. So also from the devas cf. 4,8,2: and 18,3,10: the fathers are asked to anoint us with splendour and also the devas with ghee and honey.

24. After these characteristics of devas and asuras, objectivity demands that we throw some light on the ideas the Indians had in the AV. period about amulets and their so-called "powerful herbs".

a) The Amulets.

Some texts force the reader to believe that the Atharvavedic Indians had more faith in their amulets than in their devas. Indra is increased (in power) by a certain amulet maṇinā yenendro abhivāṇydhē cf. 1,27,1: and it is even able to protest against devas and asuras (4,10,5:) and against Gandharvas and Apsarasas (19,36,6:) also 8,7,2: stresses this protection against devas "6).

Elsewhere it says that an amulet has been made by deva and men cf. 5,14,7: devakṛtā . . . vā puruṣaiḥ kṛtā (maṇi) and 10,6,32: tells us that the devas and gītaras and men always depend upon this amulet i.e. the destruction of the Asuras cf. 10,6,22: The devas needed it in their battles (10,3,2:), also against the asuras (10,3,5: 11:) and in 19,33,3: and amulet of darbha is called: devaśurman "defence of the god" and 19,33,4: calls it "strength of the gods". A similar statement is found in 19,35,2:.

These amulets are given (2,4,4:) or approved by the devas 1,35,4: devasir dattava. Their power is ojo devūnām cf. 3,5,1: 3: 19,33,4: cf. also 5,14,3: Also in 10,6,5: where we hear that the amulet comes from the devas. At times there is cooperation between devas and the amulets; several passages relate to us that the amulet has been devajāta "born from the gods" cf. 10,6,31: 19,32,7: 33,6: 34,6:.

Another point is that quite a number of adjectives, in other hymns, applied to the devas, occur here with the amulets, for instance "life-giving" 8,7,4: 1,35,1: 19,28,1: 32,1: 33,1: 37,2: They are called also 6,69,3: although it might be open to another interpretation as well, "Let Prajāpati fix that in me, as the heaven in the sky"; cf. 6,100,1: 2:.

The devas maintain everything: devā uttarasmim jyotiṣi dhārayantu (1,9,1:) cf. 19,58,2: about Brhaspati. They maintained security: kṣemam adidharan (3,3,5:) Pṛthivī maintains trees, mountains and also the expecting mother and her child cf. 6,17,1—4: and Agni and Soma are requested to maintain their supremacy 6,54,2:. The context of 1,13,4: implies that the devas have created the thunderstorm and lightnings. This passage uses asṛjanta, but 1,33,3: uses the word kṛ-: kṛṇvanti cf. also 13,3,1: 15:. So Prajāpati generates offspring prajāḥ 7,19:. In his workshop Tvaṣṭar generates the woman (6,78,3:) and Agni the sun. He is also the principle from which the devas produce the entire creation cf. 13,1,25:. The same devas created also the sun 13,3,12: and again 19,17,9: praises Prajāpati for his enormous generative power prajānanatvān "having creative strength". It might be observed in passing that there is no clear evidence to allow the conclusion that, according to the Indians, the devas did create ex nihilo i.e. sine praejacente materia. After all sṛj- means still "to send out" and kṛ- means just the "making of a thing". According to 3,8,1: Mitra arranges the seasons ṛtubhiḥ kalpamānah and the uniting of the earth with the "ruddy ones" (the sun? etc.). 3,31,7: by their breath the gods set in motion the sun: prāṇeṇa viśvato viryam devāḥ sūryam samārayan and 4,36,5: ye devās tena hāṣante sūryeṇa mimāṣe javam "the gods hasten with him, they measure the speed with the sun". So lightning and thunder are the signs of the devas 7,11:.

I believe these few quotations prove that the Indians were convinced that some of their devas had a more than normal power or, to be as sharp as possible, that their powers — maybe still natural — still do surpass the power of nature.

23. Another indication in that same direction of Supreme Being is the relationship between devas and ṛta. In the RV. section we gave a somewhat longer discussion of it. That may suffice here as well. We meet the composita and derivatives far less in AV. than in RV. We come across prathamajam ṛtasya "firstborn of righteousness" cf. 2,1,4: (Agni) 4,35,1: (Prajāpati) 5,17,1: (Matarisvan) 6,122,1: (Viśvakarman) 8,9,21: (the devas as group) 18,2,15: (Yama's messengers).

We find some derivatives as ṛtātari cf. 3,13,7: 6,36,1: where we find ṛtasya pati as well, further also ṛtāvan cf. e.g. 6,36,2:. Cf. 18,2,15: We come across ṛtāvṛdh "increasers of ṛta" cf. 4,29,1: 11,6,19: 20: 18,2,15: and in 6,22,1: we hear "they have come from the seat of ṛta".

Another expression, used here of Varuna, is satyāṁṛte atapaśīyam cf. 1,33,2: "he is looking (as a judge) at truth and falsehood". 6,1,2: praises Savitar as satya sām and 3,16,3: praises Bhāga as satyarādhas "of true bestowal".

7,6,2: occurs Aditi, mother of the Adityas i.e. Varuna, Mitra, Bhāga, called "spouse of ṛta": ṛtasya patnī. I might be mistaken, but in these quotations with ṛta, a somewhat more elevated feeling and a less materialistic tone could be felt. Something of the absoluteness of law and right eternal.

One point more is to be added: sometimes we do find a request for blessing from Agni so amṛtabhyam adhi bravat (1,16,1:), or from Indra 1,16,2: and Varuna. So also from the devas cf. 4,8,2:, and 18,3,10: the fathers are asked to anoint us with splendour and also the devas with ghee and honey.

24. After these characteristics of devas and asuras, objectivity demands that we throw some light on the ideas the Indians had in the AV. period about amulets and their so-called "powerful herbs".

a) The Amulets.

Some texts force the reader to believe that the Atharvavedic Indians had more faith in their amulets than in their devas. Indra is increased (in power) by a certain amulet maṇuṇā yemendro abhicāyudhe cf. 1,29,1: and it is even able to protest against devas and asuras (4,10,5:) and against Gandharvas and Apsarasas (19,36,6:) also 8,7,2: stresses this protection against devas ").

Elsewhere it says that an amulet has been made by deva and men cf. 5,14,7: devatṛtā . . . vā puruṣaṇi kṛtā (maṇi) and 10,6,32: tells us that the devas and pitras and men always depend upon this amulet i.e. the destruction of the Asuras cf. 10,6,22:. The devas needed it in their battles (10,3,2:), also against the asuras (10,3,5: 11:) and in 19,30,3: and amulet of darbha is called: devatārman "defence of the gods" and 19,33,4: calls it "strength of the gods". A similar statement is found in 19,35,2:.

These amulets are given (2,4,4:) or approved by the devas 1,35,4: devair dattena. Their power is ojo devānām cf. 3,5,1: 3: 19,33,4: cf. also 5,14,3:. Also in 10,6,5: where we hear that the amulet comes from the devas. At times there is cooperation between devas and the amulets; several passages relate to us that the amulet has been devajūta "born from the gods" cf. 10,6,31: 19,32,7: 33,6: 34,6:.

Another point is that quite a number of adjectives, in other hymns, applied to the devas, occur here with the amulets, for instance "life-giving" 8,7,4: 1,35,1: 19,28,1: 32,1: 33,1: 37,2:. They are called also 6,69,3: although it might be open to another interpretation as well, "Let Prajāpati fix that in me, as the heaven in the sky"; cf. 6,100,1: 2:.

The devas maintain everything: devā uttarasmim jyotiṣi dhārayantu (1,9,1:) cf. 19,58,2: about Bṛhaspati. They maintained security: kṣemam adidharan (3,3,5:) Prithivī maintains trees, mountains and also the expecting mother and her child cf. 6,17,1—4: and Agni and Soma are requested to maintain their supremacy 6,54,2:. The context of 1,13,4: implies that the devas have created the thunderstorm and lightnings. This passage uses asṛjanta, but 1,33,3: uses the word kṛ-: kṛvanti cf. also 13,3,1: 15:. So Prajāpati generates offspring prajā 7,19:. In his workshop Tvaṣṭar generates the woman (6,78,3:) and Agni the sun. He is also the principle from which the devas produce the entire creation cf. 13,1,25:. The same devas created also the sun 13,3,12: and again 19,17,9: praises Prajāpati for his enormous generative power prajānanatvān "having creative strength". It might be observed in passing that there is no clear evidence to allow the conclusion that, according to the Indians, the devas did create ex nihilo i.e. sine praejacente materia. After all ṛj- means still "to send out" and kṛ- means just the "making of a thing". According to 3,8,1: Mitra arranges the seasons ṛtubhiḥ kalpamānaḥ and the uniting of the earth with the "ruddy ones" (the sun? etc.). 3,31,7: by their breath the gods set in motion the sun: prāṇeṇa vīvatorviryam devāḥ sūryam tamsi-rayan and 4,36,5: ye devās tena hāsante sūryeṇa mumate jayam "the gods hasten with him, they measure the speed with the sun". So lightning and thunder are the signs of the devas 7,11:.

I believe these few quotations prove that the Indians were convinced that some of their devas had a more than normal power or, to be as sharp as possible, that their powers — maybe still natural — still do surpass the power of nature.

23. Another indication in that same direction of Supreme Being is the relationship between devas and ṛta. In the RV. section we gave a somewhat longer discussion of it. That may suffice here as well. We meet the composita and derivatives far less in AV. than in RV. We come across prathamam ṛtasya "firstborn of righteousness" cf. 2,1,4: (Agni) 4,35,1: (Prajāpati) 5,17,1: (Matarisvan) 6,122,1: (Viśvakarman) 8,9,21: (the devas as group) 18,2,15: (Yama's messengers).

We find some derivatives as ṛtāvati cf. 3,13,7. 6,36,1 where we find ṛtasya pati as well, further also ṛtāvan cf. e.g. 6,36,2: Cf. 18,2,15: We come across ṛtārdh "increasers of ṛta" cf. 4,29,1: 11,6,19: 20: 18,2,15: and in 6,22,1: we hear "they have come from the seat of ṛta".

Another expression, used here of Varuṇa, is satyāṇṛte avapāyam cf. 1,33,2: "he is looking (as a judge) at truth and falsehood". 6,1,2: praises Savitar as satya sīmū and 3,16,3: praises Bhāga as satyarādhas "of true bestowal".

7,6,2: occurs Aditi, mother of the Adityas i.e. Varuṇa, Mitra, Bhāga, called "spouse of ṛta": ṛtasya patnī. I might be mistaken, but in these quotations with ṛta, a somewhat more elevated feeling and a less materialistic tone could be felt. Something of the absoluteness of law and right eternal.

One point more is to be added: sometimes we do find a request for blessing from Agni so asmabhyam adhi bravat (1,16,1:), or from Indra 1,16,2: and Varuṇa. So also from the devas cf. 4,8,2:, and 18,3,10: the fathers are asked to anoint us with splendour and also the devas with ghee and honey.

24. After these characteristics of devas and asuras, objectivity demands that we throw some light on the ideas the Indians had in the AV. period about amulets and their so-called "powerful herbs".

a) The Amulets.

Some texts force the reader to believe that the Atharvavedic Indians had more faith in their amulets than in their devas. Indra is increased (in power) by a certain amulet maṇinā yenendro abhivāṇyate cf. 1,29,1: and it is even able to protest against devas and asuras (4,10,5:) and against Gandharvas and Apsarases (19,36,6:) also 8,7,2: stresses this protection against devas!).

Elsewhere it says that an amulet has been made by devas and men cf. 5,14,7: devaskṛtā . . . vā paṇṣaṣṭhi kṛtā (maṇi) and 10,6,32: tells us that the devas and pitras and men always depend upon this amulet i.e. the destruction of the Asuras cf. 10,6,22:. The devas needed it in their battles (10,3,2:), also against the asuras (10,3,5: 11:) and in 19,30,3: and amulet of darbha is called: devavarman "defence of the gods" and 19,33,4: calls it "strength of the gods". A similar statement is found in 19,35,2:.

These amulets are given (2,4,4:) or approved by the devas 1,35,4: devas dattena. Their power is ojo devānām cf. 3,5,1: 3: 19,33,4: cf. also 5,14,3:. Also in 10,6,5: where we hear that the amulet comes from the devas. At times there is cooperation between devas and the amulets; several passages relate to us that the amulet has been devajāta "born from the gods" cf. 10,6,31: 19,32,7: 33,6: 34,6:.

Another point is that quite a number of adjectives, in other hymns, applied to the devas, occur here with the amulets, for instance "life-giving" 8,7,4: 1,35,1: 19,28,1: 32,1: 33,1: 37,2:. They are called "heroes" cf. 8,5,1: etc., "rival-slaying" 8,5,2: 10,3,1: 6,29: 19,30,4: 31,8: 32,10: 33,2:, as well as "powerful and vigorous" cf. 8,5,1: "overpowering" 10,6,29: "formidable" the adjective ugra specially of Indra cf. 8,5,1: 19,33,4: and 8,5,5: calls the devas the purohitar "representatives", implicitly strengthened by this amulet. Again some passages show us — as we might have expected — the amulet as a deva itself cf. 8,5,20: devamani and 19,33,1: devo manih.

25. A last paragraph about the herbs.

First of all it must be stated that not every application of a herb is necessarily a sort of magic. Vroklage states in his *Godsdienst der primitieven*¹³: "Gift blijft als drank of poeder zijn gewone kenmerken bezitten, die het van nature en dus altijd bezit, maar daarnaast wordt er een bijzondere kracht door bepaalde middelen, mengsels of spreuken van een deskundige aan toegevoegd, waardoor het volgens de primitieve opvatting tot gift — tot deze bepaalde magische kracht wordt." And in his lectures he always stressed the point that the primitive has a good discrimination for the natural powers of a herb or medicine, and for the magic influence, and he also emphasized this particular point: "these two he will mix up, and never get mixed up by it." So a number of passages and entire hymns sing of the power of the herbs, some of which I would regard as pure medicines (but may be magically administered) like e.g. 1,23,1: 2,3: and 4,12: and elsewhere the wording of the hymns lays stress on more than natural power e.g. 1,22: and 1,24: cf. also 1,34 (as a lovespell) or 1,35: where they use gold as a means of prolonging life.

Those herbs are called devajātā cf. 2,7,1: 6,136,1: 19,32,7: (of the darbha). Elsewhere they are mentioned as devair dattam cf. 4,9,1:, so 2,25,1: calls a herb devi prīṇaparn "divine spotted leaf" and also other passages give this title of devi to the plants and herbs cf. 4,20,1: 2:, also 19,33,1:. Some herbs are antidotal cf. 4,6 and 4,7:. Else 4,17: we find some against witchcraft and devils, but nowhere against the devas. 6,136 and 137 are made for increase of hair. And this hair-restorer is called deva (6,136,1:) and in 8,7,20 amritam even more herbs might serve against sin and help us to have our sins forgiven; cf. 6,96,2: 8,7,10: 10,1,12:.

Conclusions.

Recapitulating, we see deva as a name for in fact non-human beings. Anyhow, it means something sublime. But we may not consider this title deva too high because beasts and seeds and even a hair-restorer are given this name as well. The devas give prosperity as they are lords of riches and wealth, they are "immortal", but they share this "great vitality" with the waters, plants, and herbs. This quality has been acquired and surely is not inborn from origin. The devas are wise but their wisdom is not omniscience. They are honoured by offerings and sacrifices; they, however, need sacrifices as means to reach their ends and so they sacrifice for themselves. They are always ready to help and therefore easily invoked as they have a kind and friendly attitude when they are praised and sacrificed to. They are mighty and formidable, and so able to help and to extend protection. However mighty, they are never mentioned as being almighty in the strict sense and their paramountcy is bound to certain spheres of influence. Their power is still growing and increasing. It seems that there is no difference between asuras, devas and human beings in essentials, but there is some discrimination between asuras and devas. Among devas are ties of blood and sex-relationship.

But, there are certainly some divine characteristics among the traits of character of the devas. And here I use "divine" in sensu stricto: they forgive and punish sins. They have power over life and death, the elements and even over the human minds and hearts. They give authority, and maintain and support everything; sometimes they are connected with ṛta.

Even these traits, however sublime they might appear, are blemished by the fact that the same qualities and characteristics are given to and praised in herbs and amulets, and that these seem to be on the very same level and sometimes even higher than the devas.

I add some observations:

1) My own opinion is, that the terms deva, daiuī, dīvyā are too readily used. It looks as if they had a very high meaning in olden times. But deva and its derivatives might have lost much of their initial meaning. It may have implied: "absolutely divine". Some traits of character still call to mind the old contents, but being now so often used, it lost the old meaning of deus in sensu stricto, and has become: sublime, exalted, superhuman, just as we also use "divine" for quite a number of things and persons "quite undivine".

2) The old sense of deva seems to have gone to powers of protection and help, powers of nature, remorse, (fear of punishment for our sins) powers of fertility, fecundity and wisdom, powers of prosperity and might, thoughts to be persons; though of no divine nature, then surely of superhuman nature with quite a few human traits and some strictly divine characteristics.

Vedic man was so caught up by the dangers and magic of his environment that he looked for help and protection against such fears and anxiousness. But his mind must have been influenced by the cultures he met, so that his ideas about deva fairly early, already in RV. are lowering more and more, and in the end the dog and a hairrestorer, every healing herb and love-spell ends up in being praised and lauded as "deva".

So deva will have this meaning for us: "a superhuman power, sometimes kind and of helpful strength, but nowhere in essence divine, though here or there some traits might allude to that, but nowhere universally — having a good number of strictly human characteristics, and used even for inanimate nature".

Opinions of the authorities.

Working through the publications on Rg Veda, Atharva Veda, on their age, as well as their cultural background, it struck me that only a small number of passages were dedicated to the precise rendering of the term deva, though many, many books were written on the Religions of India as a whole. Yet, this has been the very reason for this paper. However, one is able to discover, "between the lines", all kinds of opinions on this topic, but nobody undertook serious research. We noted the following nuances among the theories of the authors.

1. The devas are aspects of the only Divine Being. "Zwischen diesen Göttergestalten besteht eben tatsächlich keine scharfe Grenze. Sie sind im Grunde eins und dasselbe, Beinamen des höchsten guten Wesens" ¹⁶). The same author, L. von Schröder, tries to explain on p. 441—445 that: "the name of God was Dyaus, Dyaus pitar, Asura or Dyaus Asura. But the other aspects of God were expressed by Varuna (Umfasser, Allumfasser), Mitra (friend), Aryaman (truthful especially in contracts), Parjanya (nourishing one) and Dakṣa-Dhātṛ as the creating and ordering aspect". In my opinion Schröder does here a bit of wishful thinking: he transplants his own ideas regarding the Divine Being into the thoughts of the Vedic priests.

Macdonell ¹⁷) speaking on those aspects of the devas regarding fire, lightning and the sun, states: "aspects which the Vedic poets are fond of alluding to in riddles, would suggest the idea that various deities are but different forms of a single divine being. This idea it found in more than one passage: cf. RV. 1,164: 10,114,5."

So also G. Dumézil ¹⁸): "Mais les poètes du Rg Veda quels que fussent parfois les élans de leur pitié, n'ont jamais pensé, n'ont jamais souhaité que Varuna fût seul à les administrer. Ils sont restés fidèles à une conception plus analytique, héritée, nous l'avons vu, des temps indo-européens."

2. Other writers consider the devas as "natural gods" (natuurgodheid). This very term may say anything and nothing. What do the authors mean by this expression? Some of them do not give an explanation. L. von Schröder o.c. p. 329 relates: "und er (Zarathustra) warf zugleich die Mehrzahl der alten Naturgötter, der devas, die Konkurrenten des Ahura in Bezug auf göttliche Macht, aus seinem Olymp hinaus und stempelte sie zu bösen Dämonen, darunter auch Indra." According to the ideas of von Schröder Zarathustra probably eliminated the devas as "nature deities" or he might find himself in a contradictory situation.

The same idea is fostered by Majumdar²⁹) "The chief deities of the earlier books owe their origin to personification of natural phenomena." So also Jacobi³⁰): "Die vedischen Götter sind teils Naturgötter bei denen die in ihnen repräsentierte Naturkraft zu Tage liegt, zum B. Sūrya, Uṣas, Vāyu and Vāta, teils solche Naturgötter bei denen die ethische Bedeutung mehr in den Vordergrund tritt, wie Agni, Indra (priesterlicher Gott und himmlischer König)". Thus Farquhar in his "Outline of Religious Literature". "They (the gods) are personifications of nature, they lack character and tend to melt into one another" (p. 15). And M. Bloomfield: "They are the gods who are at one and the same time nature, object; and person"³¹) and again (o.c., p. 182) he ascertains that devas are most often in some relation to the visible and audible powers of nature. Cambridge History of India I, p. 103: "The objects of devotion of the priests were the great phenomena of nature conceived as alive and usually represented in anthropomorphic shape". So Barnett³²): "all these (gods) are or were originally deified powers of nature". About the same opinion has B. K. Ghosh in his Vedic Age cf. p. 219 and 360, and E. W. Hopkins in his Ethics of India, p. 4.

3. A. B. Keith³³) explains that: "seeing mountains, plants and trees, sacrificial grass and sacrificial posts, arms, as devas, indicates fetishism. Doubtless in this we are to see fetishism rather than full divinity: the thing adored attains for the time being and in its special use a holiness which is not perpetually and normally its own."

4. H. Oldenberg³⁴) likes to see it from another angle. Though he does not use the term itself, he strongly suggests that the worship of the devas is animism. "Für den vedischen Glauben ist die ganze den Menschen umgebende Welt besetzt. Alles ist erfüllt vom lebendigen dem Menschen bald freundlichen bald feindlichen Geister-Dasein".

5. But as regards the evil-minded devas Oldenberg holds the opinion that: "die Mehrzahl der bösen Geister sind verstorbene Menschen" (o.c. p. 58) and "ganz fehlen direkte Spuren des Zusammenhangs verschiedenartiger Dämonen mit Seelen Verstorbener übrigens auch in der älteren Literatur nicht" (o.c., p. 58).

6. Some other writers considered the devas as superhuman beings, whose force surpasses man's, have something divine, yet more per appropriationem than from their own inner self²³). "Dass das Wort übernatürliche Wesen überhaupt, also auch böse Wesen, dämonisches Wesen bezeichne" and more clearly Arbman expresses himself at the end of his work: "In der Volkreligion entscheiden — und dies gilt besonders von der indischen Religion — nicht ethische Gesichtspunkte ob ein Wesen ein Gott ist oder nicht. Eher hat man in deva ein Wesen von etwas grösseren Dimensionen und selbständigerer Individualität zu sehen" (o.c., p. 153). H. von Glasenapp²⁴) comes to the same conclusions. "Die Heiligen, die Engel, der Teufel und seine Heerscharen nehmen dem einen Gott gegenüber eine ähnliche Stellung ein wie die vielen Gottheiten des Hindu-Pantheons gegenüber dem Weltenherrscher. Wenn die letzteren als "Götter" (deva, devatā) bezeichnet werden, die ersteren nicht, so ist dies mehr ein formaler als ein wesenhafter Unterschied, der in der verschieden gearteten historischen Entwicklung der einzelnen Religionen seinen Grund hat."

7. And lastly I come to S. Radhakrishnan²⁵). He gives an entirely new explanation, to which however I cannot adhere. "An important point to be borne in mind in this discussion is that the word deva is so very elusive in its nature and is used to indicate many different things. "Deva is one who gives to man". God is deva because He gives the whole world. The learned man who imparts knowledge to fellow-man is also a deva. The sun, the moon, and "the sky" are devas because they give light to all creation. Father and mother and spiritual guides are also devas. Even a guest is a deva. We have to take into account only that notion of deva which answers at least roughly to the modern conception of God. It means bright". I would remark that the very application of the term deva to all those beings proves that its contents are widely different from our idea of "God".

EXAMINATION OF THE BRAHMANAS

For further investigation into the concept of deva in the Vedic period we have examined the Pañcavimśa Brāhmaṇa, Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa (in Auswahl Caland) and the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (ed. H. Oertel).

We have found a number of passages where deva does not have any evident contents. Deva has been used for a groupname cf. P. Br. 1,1,7: mr̥dā śīthirā devānām tirtham vedir asi mā mā bim̐śih. "Through clay soft (art thou) the ford of the Gods, the vedi art thou; do not hurt me"').

J. Up. Br. 3,26,5: suggests at least something that is not without evident contents, but with regard to a more exalted being. (Tṛptir) taṁ devān abhipravāhati: ("satisfaction"). It carries him forth to the gods". But I hesitate to state that it is of value. In my opinion it is no more than a slight suggestion.

Elsewhere we find deva as a mere title in a number of passages: something like: "divine". Sometimes the context indicates a nuance of sublime and exalted. cf. P. Br. 1,5,1: "the doors of divine order ye are" cf. also P. Br. 1,6,4: and 1,6,5: 9: 11: 12: and about Savitṛ 1,8,1: and the next stanza 2: we hear about a "divine" Dakṣiṇā. So Vāyu is called a deva P. Br. 4,6,7: and Aditya P. Br. 15,4,2: and even the pressing stones and the waters P. Br. 21,10,17: 20: the Maruts P. Br. 21,14,3: and Varuṇa P. Br. 24,18,8.

Jaim. Br. § 186 states that the devas need the somadraught and that they are feeble and weak if they abstain from this drink: yuvam tū asartan stho, yan devan santān asomapan sthaḥ, which Caland renders: "Ihr seid gebrechlich, weil ihr, obgleich Götter, nicht den Somatrank bekommt". In J. Up. Br. we discover that the sāman belongs to the devas cf. 1,33,5: 8: 36,10: 42,1: So about the dīśaḥ 2,2,4: and 11,5: imā dīśo bhātān tā u eva viśve devāḥ. 3,4,8: renders this title to Vāyu and the antarikṣa and 3,28,1: 2: renders the same title to the sun and the moon.

2. The devas are in some aspects like human beings.

a) They themselves sacrifice. cf. P. Br. 1,1,2: 11,5,6: 23,6,3: 5: and J. Br. § 23 and § 207. It is interesting to discover that the devas very often sacrifice, present offerings, and sing hymns; that they press the soma, but we never hear mentioned to whom they offer and sing their sacred hymns. This indicates that already in these late Vedic times the Indians considered every sacrificial rite or song as a power in itself. They saw them as a performance of acts automatically influencing everything by their inherent power and they obviously believed that the very rites did not demand and presume a higher deva or supreme being for further intervention.

Another aspect of the devas is the frequent ascribing of priesthood to certain devas. deva means priestly functions, cf. P. Br. 1,3,5: 9,4,5: 21,10,11. P. Br. 3,6,7: "he is born for the office of purohita". But side by side with him we encounter Bṛhaspati as the udgātṛ, of the gods, cf. P. Br. 6,5,5: 6,7,1: and P. Br. 25,1,7: states that he is purohita. J. Br. § 140 gives Agni the same title and function! An interesting quotation from P. Br. 13,5,5: tells us the well known fact that Viṣṇu himself is the sacrifice. Prof. J. Gonda in his work: Aspects of early Viṣṇuism, Utrecht 1954, p. 77 ff., dedicates a chapter to this fact. J. Br. § 27 states that yajña is the devaratha "the vehiculum of the gods" and § 108 that Prajāpati created or emanated sacrifice: Prajāpatir yajñam aṣṭjata.

J. Br. § 93 and § 98 render the following fact: "by intercourse one is born into this world, by sacrifice one is born to the other world", tad yan mithunāj jāyate tad aśman lokāya jāyate: 'tha yad yajñāj jāyate, tad amuṣman lokāya jāyate gandharvalokāya jāyate, devāloka-ka-ya jāyate svargalokāya jāyate. So at times it struck me that yajñam has a wider range of influence than the deva.

P. Br. 12,8,6: refers to a certain Dadhyañ as purohita devānām. Elsewhere we hear that the devas like to be present at sattras and other sacrificial sessions, cf. P. Br. 6,2,6: ta devena yajñena yajate ya evaṃ veda: "sacrifice where the devas are present, is performed by him who knows this etc."

b) The devas have bodies.

J. Up. Br. 1,15,5: devā vai svargam lokam āyan, ta etāny rkpaddni śarīrāni dhīrvanta āyan. "They kept shaking off their bodies — that are the re-parts, and so they went to the heavenly world"; cf. also 3,30,4:.

Because the devas possess bodies they can be hurt cf. P. Br. 16,10,10: and so they need medicines, which the Atharvans have bheshajam vai devānām atharvāṇo bheshajyāyat-āṣṭhyat. So the devas can be taken ill, cf. P. Br. 21,4,2: and also be subject to old age 25,17,3:.

c) The devas can be afraid.

They can be afraid that the sun might fall cf. P. Br. 4,5,2: they are afraid of Agni (P. Br. 5,3,9:). Elsewhere we meet the expression that the devas are afraid of confusion, P. Br. 13,4,8: So Indra is afraid of Vṛtra P. Br. 12,5,21: and in 15,11,9: he is related as fleeing from Vṛtra. Also J. Br. shows us the devas in great terror. The devas are afraid of the burning heat of the sun (J. Br. § 11) and of the Vajra (§ 26) though it is their own weapon. Indra is frightened to death of Vṛtra, particularly as he doubts, whether he killed the Vṛtra by the Vajra cf. J. Br. § 33: 142: 158: The devas are even afraid that the human beings will overtake them (J. Br. § 168) and § 131 relates about the fright of the devas of their opponents, the Asuras.

d) This implies that the devas need strengthening of their natural forces. So we hear in P. Br. 4,1,15: that Prajāpati strengthened himself by the prṣṭhāman: sa idam bhuvanam prajānāyitvā prṣṭhyena śaśahena vīryam ātmany adhatta cf. J. Br. § 139 and § 166; also P. Br. 4,10,1: 9,6,7: 10,2,1: 15,8,2: those last citations are remarkable where we read: "Prajāpati had created the creatures: he was exhausted". So P. Br. 18,5,2: and 18,11,1: 4: show us Indra totally exhausted back and revived with the help of the other devas. annādyam udakrāmat: "Von dem ..."

The quotations made above show us quite clearly that the late-Vedic Indian had no idea of devas of inexhaustible powers. Time and again they state that Prajāpati after his creation was fully "emptied and milked out" as the translation runs. And Indra's strength went amiss by his slaying Vṛtra. So we may conclude that the Indians regarded the powers of the devas as limited.

e) As a matter of fact we have to note that the devas are nowhere considered as omnipotent. We found numerous proofs for this. cf. P. Br. 8,8,1: ukthām nāiaknuvan: "He could not conquer the ukthas". We come across this "non possumus" practically everywhere cf. P. Br. 9,1,1: "they could not discern the asuras and so they needed the pragātha to drive the asuras away". cf. also P. Br. 9,5,4: where is spoken of the devas in need of the pūtika (plant) and P. Br. 5,3,9: where they are said to use the Varana in order to prevent ill-luck. So P. Br. 10,7,2: devā vai śriyam aicchān: "the devas sought fortune or they desired it". They always look for something else to help materialize their wishes and never use their own powers, but they make use of hymns and rites as the means to furnish them the forces to succeed. cf. P. Br. 14,9,34: 15,3,39: 19,7,1: 20,3,2: 4: Even Vindanvat the son of Bhṛgu struck at Indra: Vindanvān vai Bhṛgava Indrasya pratyaban (P. Br. 13,11,10). So it appears that even Indra is liable to strokes. J. Br. § 48 where Indra asked for a third pressing of the soma and the devas answered: "we cannot,

often sacrifice, present offerings, and sing hymns; that they press the soma, but we never hear mentioned to whom they offer and sing their sacred hymns. This indicates that already in these late Vedic times the Indians considered every sacrificial rite or song as a power in itself. They saw them as a performance of acts automatically influencing everything by their inherent power and they obviously believed that the very rites did not demand and presume a higher deva or supreme being for further intervention.

Another aspect of the same idea is the frequent ascribing of priesthood to certain devas. We find Agni as performing priestly functions, cf. P. Br. 1,3,5; 9,4,5; 21,10,11; 24,13,5; and J. Up. Br. 3,6,7: "he is born for the office of purohita". But side by side with him we encounter Brhaspati as the udgātṛ, of the gods, cf. P. Br. 6,5,5; 6,7,1; and P. Br. 25,1,7; states that he is purohita. J. Br. § 140 gives Agni the same title and function! An interesting quotation from P. Br. 13,5,5; tells us the well known fact that Viṣṇu himself is the sacrifice. Prof. J. Gonda in his work: Aspects of early Viṣṇuism, Utrecht 1954, p. 77 ff., dedicates a chapter to this fact. J. Br. § 27 states that yajña is the devarāṭha "the vehiculum of the gods" and § 108 that Prajāpati created or emanated sacrifice: Prajāpatir yajñam aṣṭjata.

J. Br. § 93 and § 98 render the following fact: "by intercourse one is born into this world, by sacrifice one is born to the other world", tad yan mithunāj jāyate tad aśmai lokāya jāyate: 'tha yad yajñāj jāyate, tad amuṣmai lokāya jāyate gandharvalokāya jāyate, devālo-kāya jāyate sargalokāya jāyate. So at times it struck me that yajñam has a wider range of influence than the deva.

P. Br. 12,8,6; refers to a certain Dadhyañc as purohita devānām. Elsewhere we hear that the devas like to be present at sattras and other sacrificial sessions, cf. P. Br. 6,2,6; sa devena yajñena yajate ya evaṃ veda: "sacrifice where the devas are present, is performed by him who knows this etc."

b) The devas have bodies.

J. Up. Br. 1,15,5 devā vai sargam lokam āyan, ta etāny rṣpadāni śarīrāṇi dhūmanta āyan. "They kept shaking off their bodies — that are the ṛc-parts, and so they went to the heavenly world"; cf. also 3,50,4.

Because the devas possess bodies they can be hurt cf. P. Br. 16,10,10; and so they need medicines, which the Atharvans have bheṣajam vai devānām atharvāṇo bheṣajyāyarcārṇiṣṭhyai. So the devas can be taken ill, cf. P. Br. 21,4,2; and also be subject to old age 25,17,3.

c) The devas can be afraid.

They can be afraid that the sun might fall cf. P. Br. 4,5,9; they are afraid of Agni (P. Br. 5,3,9:). Elsewhere we meet the expression that the devas are afraid of confusion, P. Br. 13,4,8: So Indra is afraid of Vṛtra P. Br. 12,5,21: and in 15,11,9: he is related as fleeing from Vṛtra. Also J. Br. shows us the devas in great terror. The devas are afraid of the burning heat of the sun (J. Br. § 11) and of the Vajra (§ 26) though it is their own weapon. Indra is frightened to death of Vṛtra, particularly as he doubts, whether he killed the Vṛtra by the Vajra cf. J. Br. § 33: 142: 158: The devas are even afraid that the human beings will overtake them (J. Br. § 168) and § 131 relates about the fright of the devas of their opponents, the Asuras.

d) This implies that the devas need strengthening of their natural forces. So we hear in P. Br. 4,1,15: that Prajāpati strengthened himself by the pr̥thāsāman: sa idaṃ bhuvaniṃ prajānāyitvā pr̥thyena p̥ṣadabena vīryam ātmany adbatta. cf. J. Br. § 139 and § 166; also P. Br. 4,10,1: 9,6,7: 10,2,1: 15,8,2: those last citations are remarkable where we read: "Prajāpati had created the creatures: he was exhausted". So P. Br. 18,5,2: and 18,11,1: 4: show us Indra totally brought back and revived with the help of the other devas annādyam udakrāmat: "Von

The quotations annādyam udakrāmat is quite clearly that the late-Vedic Indian had no idea of devas as inexhaustible powers. Time and again they state that Prajāpati after his creation was fully "emptied and milked out" as the translation runs. And Indra's strength went amiss by his slaying Vṛtra. So we may conclude that the Indians regarded the powers of the devas as limited.

e) As a matter of fact we have to note that the devas are nowhere considered as omnipotent. We found numerous proofs for this, cf. P. Br. 8,8,1: uktvān nāśaknuvān: "He could not conquer the uktas". We come across this "non possumus" practically everywhere cf. P. Br. 9,1,1: "they could not discern the anuras and so they needed the pragātha to drive the asuras away", cf. also P. Br. 9,5,4: where is spoken of the devas in need of the pātika (plant) and P. Br. 5,3,9: where they are said to use the Varāṇa in order to prevent ill-luck. So P. Br. 10,7,2: devā vai irīyam aicchan: "the devas sought fortune or they desired it". They always look for something else to help materialize their wishes and never use their own powers, but they make use of hymns and rites as the means to furnish them the forces to succeed. cf. P. Br. 14,9,34: 15,3,39: 19,7,1: 20,3,2: 4: Even Vindanvat the son of Bhṛgu struck at Indra: Vindanvān vai Bhārgava Indrasya pratyakṣan (P. Br. 13,11,10). So it appears that even Indra is liable to strokes. J. Br. § 48 where Indra asked for a third pressing of the soma and the devas answered: "we cannot, often sacrifice, present offerings, and sing hymns; that they press the soma, but we never hear mentioned to whom they offer and sing their sacred hymns. This indicates that already in these late Vedic times the Indians considered every sacrificial rite or song as a power in itself. They saw them as a performance of acts automatically influencing everything by their inherent power and they obviously believed that the very rites did not demand and presume a higher deva or supreme being for further intervention.

Another aspect of the same idea is the frequent ascribing of priesthood to certain devas. We find Agni as performing priestly functions. cf. P. Br. 1,3,5: 9,4,5: 21,10,11: 24,13,5: and J. Up. Br. 3,6,7: "he is born for the office of purohita". But side by side with him we encounter Brhaspati as the udgātr, of the gods, cf. P. Br. 6,5,5: 6,7,1: and P. Br. 25,1,7: states that he is purohita. J. Br. § 140 gives Agni the same title and function! An interesting quotation from P. Br. 13,5,5: tells us the well known fact that Viṣṇu himself is the sacrifice. Prof. J. Gonda in his work: Aspects of early Viṣṇuism, Utrecht 1954, p. 77 ff., dedicates a chapter to this fact. J. Br. § 27 states that yajña is the devaratha "the vehiculum of the gods" and § 108 that Prajāpati created or emanated sacrifice: Prajāpatir yajñam aṣṭjata.

J. Br. § 93 and § 98 render the following fact: "by intercourse one is born into this world, by sacrifice one is born to the other world", tad yan mithunā jāyate tad asmai lokāya jāyate: 'tha yad yajñā jāyate, tad amuṣmai lokāya jāyate gandharvalokāya jāyate, deva-lokāya jāyate svargalokāya jāyate. So at times it struck me that yajñam has a wider range of influence than the deva.

P. Br. 12,8,6: refers to a certain Dadhyañi as purohita devānām. Elsewhere we hear that the devas like to be present at sattras and other sacrificial sessions, cf. P. Br. 6,2,6: sa devena yajñena yajate ya evaṃ veda: "sacrifice where the devas are present, is performed by him who knows this etc."

b) The devas have bodies.

J. Up. Br. 1,15,5: devā vai svargam lokam āyan, ta etāny ṛkpadāni śarīrāni dbhūrvanta āyan: "They kept shaking off their bodies — that are the ṛc-parts, and so they went to the heavenly world"; cf. also 3,30,4:.

Because the devas possess bodies they can be hurt cf. P. Br. 16,10,10: and so they need medicines, which the Atharvans have bheṣajam vai devānām atharvāṇo bheṣajyāyavāriṣṭhyai. So the devas can be taken ill, cf. P. Br. 21,4,2: and also be subject to old age 25,17,3:.

c) The devas can be afraid.

They can be afraid that the sun might fall cf. P. Br. 4,5,9: they Prajāpati desires and craves for light P. Br. 16,1,1; and 24,7,2: tells us that his wishes are fulfilled by certain rites, however we did not hear the contents of those wishes. P. Br. 18,7,1: shows us Prajāpati longing for vigour. In the same way Agni is desirous of glory (P. Br. 6,5,6:) or of food (14,3,19:). So is Indra longing for glamour and energy cf. P. Br. 6,5,6: and 14,9,34: and desirous to drive away his enemies cf. P. Br. 19,18,2:.

Elsewhere we see Brhaspati craving for the function of purohita P. Br. 17,11,4: 19,17,8:.

Having desires betrays weakness, as a desire is something that is not fulfilled yet, and it often implies that the persons concerned are not able to materialize those desires by their own power. However, we could add to this: the utterance of those desires might be in the eyes of the Indian already a kind of explosion of mighty power and so the devas could be able to proceed to creation. cf. P. Br. 6,5,1: "Prajāpati desired: "may I be more (than one), may I be reproduced". "He languished and out of the head of him who languished the sun was created (or came forth, came into existence). This (sun) struck off his head: that became the draṇakalāśa, therein the gods took their soma-draughts." But mostly P. Br. gives us evidently to understand that desire has to be considered as a physical or psychical weakness, only helped by rites and prayers and tapas "austerities". We can discover ourselves that nearly every passage speaking of Prajāpati's or other's desires mentions at the very same moment the fulfilling of that wish by one or another rite. J. Br. often speaks about the wishes of the devas in genere § 5 te 'bruvann etemam jīgīṣāmeti cf. also: § 15: 19. 47: 49: 65:. Here also we meet Prajāpati as being anxious; in § 41: longing and looking for some power to retain over his own creatures. He wishes to overcome death § 128: and at times his desires are even lewd and malicious. P. Br. 8,2,10: and J. Br. § 207: They are incestuous.

Elsewhere we encounter Indra wishing to kill Vṛtra J. Br. § 73: and again it is Prajāpati, who supports him and offers him the Vajra in the shape of a śoṣāśin verse. Even Varuṇa is desirous and ambitious to receive the absolute supremacy over the devas J. Br. § 168.

J. Up. Br. gives the same picture but it gives me the impression that it is a reminiscence of older sacred lore to be found in P. Br. and J. Br. Twice we encounter Prajāpati longing for progeny J. Up. Br. 1,46,1: So (prajāpati) kāmayaśa babus syām prajāyeya bhūmānam gaccheyam iti*: and about the same is to be found in 3,15,4:. Some few passages mention the devas as a group desiring the possession of a certain sāman J. Up. Br. 1,51,3: and 1,58,8: and in 2,3,4: the devas and ṛṣis together desire the defeat of the asuras.

we are exhausted by the two other pressings. Te 'bruvan, na śākṣyāmaḥ. So § 53 presents Indra to us in pursuit of some one. He is not able to catch him. tām hendro jighrīkṣan na śatāka grabhītum, cf. also § 66, and 179: where Indra has to admit his na śākṣyāmi.

The entire § 63 reveals us the lack of omnipotent force of the devas. They are able to conquer the Universe in parts only. Reading this paragraph, we are convinced they are too human, too humanly weak. § 182 mentions the devas as trying to succeed in lifting up, but they could not, so they had to recur to Prajāpati for support. tā devā nodayacchaṃ; tāḥ prajāpataya eva punaḥ prayacchan.

J. Up. Br. 2,7,11: relates to us that the hymns can dispose of the Asuras and devas alike: Sa hovāca devān eva devaloke dadhyām, manuṣyān manuṣyaloke, pitṛn pitṛloke etc. It is by force of the Udgītha that Ayāśya Aṅgīrasa is able to do so. cf. J. Up. Br. 4,14,6: Even Indra can be overpowered by vows and penance: ta u śramaṇa tapasā vratacaryeṇendram avarurudhīre.

f) The devas, just like any human being, need very badly food and air. Prajāpati after his creating the universe, feeling exhausted, needs some food for recuperation of strength. cf. P. Br. 4,10,1: So we hear Agni devouring the food of the devas cf. P. Br. 14,3,19; 17,8,3; and elsewhere we learn that the devas eat their own food, and that is the sāman P. Br. 6,4,13: cf. also 11,5,21; 7,3,26: They eat their offerings. P. Br. 16,1,11: and ghce. P. Br. 18,2,6:

J. Br. § 23 shows us that: pavamānena vai devebhyo 'nnādyam pradiyate, and § 86 annam . . . vai devānām somo rājā. "Food of the devas is king soma". Their nourishment is the sacrifice § 97, and they live on our human gifts § 200 itahpradānād dhi devā jīvanty. They are sometimes hungry, § 38 and § 88 (some of the devas died of starvation) and J. Up. Br. 3,20,1: confirms this our theory. Agni receives the epithet annāda and in J. Up. Br. 4,11,5: he is praised as ahaṃ devānām mukham, . . . ahaṃ devānām annam vikaromy: "I transform the food of the devas". In J. Up. Br. 2,11,10: the devas beg for a share in the food: anu na etasminn annādya ābhaja. And the same work relates to us that as the pitaras, men and beasts etc. are living on air, and the devas as well; cf. 1,41,11:

That they are unable to realize every one of their wishes, is proved by the multitude of passages throughout the Brāhmaṇas, and it is interesting that the mightiest among the devas Prajāpati, Agni and Indra foster the most powerful desires.

g) Another epithet of the devas is that they desire a great many things. Prajāpati desired to have company, as he felt lonely in the beginning of time: agre cf. P. Br. 4,1,4: In short Prajāpati longs for creation cf. P. Br. 6,1,1: 6: 8: 6,5,1: 7,5,1: 6,1: 10,3,1:

Prajāpati desires and craves for light P. Br. 16,1,1; and 24,7,2: tells us that his wishes are fulfilled by certain rites, however we did not hear the contents of those wishes. P. Br. 18,7,1: shows us Prajāpati longing for vigour. In the same way Agni is desirous of glory (P. Br. 6,5,6:) or of food (14,3,19:). So is Indra longing for glamour and energy cf. P. Br. 6,5,6: and 14,9,34: and desirous to drive away his enemies cf. P. Br. 19,18,2:.

Elsewhere we see Bṛhaspati craving for the function of purohita P. Br. 17,11,4: 19,17,8:.

Having desires betrays weakness, as a desire is something that is not fulfilled yet, and it often implies that the persons concerned are not able to materialize those desires by their own power. However, we could add to this: the utterance of those desires might be in the eyes of the Indian already a kind of explosion of mighty power and so the devas could be able to proceed to creation. cf. P. Br. 6,5,1: "Prajāpati desired: "may I be more (than one), may I be reproduced". "He languished and out of the head of him who languished the sun was created (or came forth, came into existence). This (sun) struck off his head: that became the droṇakalāśa, therein the gods took their soma-draughts." But mostly P. Br. gives us evidently to understand that desire has to be considered as a physical or psychical weakness, only helped by rites and prayers and tapas "austerities". We can discover ourselves that nearly every passage speaking of Prajāpati's or other's desires mentions at the very same moment the fulfilling of that wish by one or another rite. J. Br. often speaks about the wishes of the devas in genere § 5 te 'bruvann etemam jīgīṣāmeti cf. also. § 15: 19: 47: 49: 65:. Here also we meet Prajāpati as being anxious; in § 43: longing and looking for some power to retain over his own creatures. He wishes to overcome death § 126: and at times his desires are even lewd and malicious. P. Br. 8,2,10: and J. Br. § 207: They are incestuous.

Elsewhere we encounter Indra wishing to kill Vṛtra J. Br. § 73: and again it is Prajāpati, who supports him and offers him the Vajra in the shape of a śoṣāin verse. Even Varuṇa is desirous and ambitious to receive the absolute supremacy over the devas J. Br. § 188.

J. Up. Br. gives the same picture but it gives me the impression that it is a reminiscence of older sacred lore to be found in P. Br. and J. Br. Twice we encounter Prajāpati longing for progeny J. Up. Br. 1,46,1: Sm (prajāpati) 'kāmasyata bahus syām prajāyeya bhūmānam gaccheyam iti: and about the same is to be found in 3,15,4:. Some few passages mention the devas as a group desiring the possession of a certain sāman J. Up. Br. 1,51,3: and 1,58,8: and in 2,3,4: the devas and ṛṣi together desire the defeat of the asuras.

we are exhausted by the two other pressings. Te 'bruvan, na śaksyāmaḥ. So § 53 presents Indra to us in pursuit of some one. He is not able to catch him. tām hendro jighrīṣan na śatāka grabhītum, cf. also § 66, and 179: where Indra has to admit his na śaksyāmi.

The entire § 63 reveals us the lack of omnipotent force of the devas. They are able to conquer the Universe in parts only. Reading this paragraph, we are convinced they are too human, too humanly weak. § 182 mentions the devas as trying to succeed in lifting up, but they could not, so they had to recur to Prajāpati for support. tā devā nodayacchams; tāḥ prajāpataya eva punaḥ prayacchan.

J. Up. Br. 2,7,11: relates to us that the hymns can dispose of the Asuras and devas alike: Sa hovāca devān eva devaloke dadhyām, manuṣyān manuṣyaloke, pitṛn pitṛloke etc. It is by force of the Udgītha that Ayāsyā Āngirasa is able to do so. cf. J. Up. Br. 4,14,6: Even Indra can be overpowered by vows and penance: sa u śrameṇa tapasā vratacaryeṇendram avarurudhire.

f) The devas, just like any human being, need very badly food and air. Prajāpati after his creating the universe, feeling exhausted, needs some food for recuperation of strength. cf. P. Br. 4,10,1: So we hear Agni devouring the food of the devas cf. P. Br. 14,3,19: 17,8,3: and elsewhere we learn that the devas eat their own food, and that is the sāman P. Br. 6,4,13: cf. also 11,5,21: 7,3,26: They eat their offerings. P. Br. 18,1,11: and ghee. P. Br. 18,2,6:.

J. Br. § 23 shows us that: pavamānena vai devebhyo 'nnādyam pradiyate, and § 86 annam . . . vai devānām somo rājā. "Food of the devas is king soma". Their nourishment is the sacrifice § 97, and they live on our human gifts § 200 itahpradānād dhi devā jivanty. They are sometimes hungry, § 38 and § 88 (some of the devas died of starvation) and J. Up. Br. 3,20,1: confirms this our theory. Agni receives the epithet annāda and in J. Up. Br. 4,11,5: he is praised as aham devānām mukham, . . . aham devānām annam vikaromy: "I transform the food of the devas". In J. Up. Br. 2,11,10: the devas beg for a share in the food: anu na etasminn annādya ābhaja. And the same work relates to us that as the pitaras, men and beasts etc. are living on air, and the devas as well; cf. 1,41,11:.

That they are unable to realize every one of their wishes, is proved by the multitude of passages throughout the Brāhmaṇas, and it is interesting that the mightiest among the devas Prajāpati, Agni and Indra foster the most powerful desires.

g) Another epithet of the devas is that they desire a great many things. Prajāpati desired to have company, as he felt lonely in the beginning of time: agre cf. P. Br. 4,1,4: In short Prajāpati longs for creation cf. P. Br. 6,1,1: 6: 8: 6,5,1: 7,5,1: 6,1: 10,3,1:.

upait tā atosayāt "Then he saw this (hymn) and he recited it with stanza at the end and he enforced his will upon them".

Indra needs the rites and hymns against the Vṛtra, cf. P. Br. 8,5,2: 12,6,6: 14,4,5: 12,13,23: and he drives his evil adversary away by the strength of the Vighṇa stoma, cf. P. Br. 19,18,2: He earns his victories only by the rites and sacred songs, cf. P. Br. 16,4,6: 23,10,2:.

The devas as a group are in need of them very, very badly. They need them for recalling Indra cf. P. Br. 8,5,11: and for conquering this world cf. P. Br. 9,2,9: 10,12,3: 4: 20,1,3: and 20,3,4: 22,5,4:; cf. also 16,4,6: They want them for the defeat of the asuras P. Br. 9,1,1: etc. 2,7,2: 20,8,12: and cf. also J. Br. § 16, and J. Up. Br. 1,16,4: 60,6: 7:.

The devas thrive by these rites cf. P. Br. 24,1,13: 24,12,8:.

Only by applying these rites Brhaspati becomes the devānām purohita cf. P. Br. 17,11,4: 19,17,8: By these rites the devas became devas: cf. P. Br. 22,11,2: 6: etena vai devā devatvam agacchan and 23,6,2: etābhir vai devā devatvam agacchan devatvaṃ gacchanti ya etā upayanti. So Vāyu attained sovereignty over the animals of this earth by the 19-day-rite, cf. P. Br. 23,13,2: Agni sets the Universe into motion by rites cf. P. Br. 25,9,2: just like Savitṛ P. Br. 24,15,2: and Prajāpati 25,6,2: 17,2: Mitra Varuṇa obtained these worlds in this manner P. Br. 25,10,10: J. Br. only dwells a few times on this topic, yet quite evidently reveals that the devas obtain their goals by uddhā and utśedha, cf. J. Br. § 131.

Prajāpati earns his due respect from his creatures by sacrifice only: sa etam yajñam apaiyāt (P. Br. passim). So Indra gained his supremacy among the devas by means of a sacrifice: tato vā indrah sarveṣāṃ devānāṃ irāṣṭhyam agacchad J. Br. § 141 tam āharat; tenainam ayājayat; sa brhuvanā sarvā mṛdho vyahata.

i) The devas practise meditation to reach their aims.

So in P. Br. 7,6,1: Prajāpati meditated silently, in his mind, and what was in his mind became the brhat: sa cāṣṭīm manasā dhyāyat tasya yaṃ manasyāsit tad brhat samabhatat.

They practise tapas "austerities".

P. Br. 12,5,23: says that devās tapo 'tapyanta: sa etad ariṣṭam apalyan. So Agni became an eater of food after his tapas. P. Br. 14,3,19: and Indra desiring honour and energy practised tapas as well cf. P. Br. 14,11,37: Even the Aṅgīrates did so cf. P. Br. 20,11,3: and the devas as group cf. P. Br. 25,5,3:.

It often happens that the tapas gives them enlightenment and so they find the proper rite or receive a vision of the hymns and by practising or performing them, they succeed. J. Br. § 65 presents the devas as longing for heaven: devā vai sargakāmās tapo 'tapyanta.

h) Closely connected with the points related above is the everywhere revealed viewpoint of the Vedic Indian that the devas are much dependent on hymns and rites in order to reach their aims. I dare not say that the devas could not achieve their ends in any other way, but often the texts themselves say that such is the case: cf. P. Br. 4,1,4: that Prajāpati desired to be multiplied in creatures and by seeing the overnight rite, he practised it and by doing so he begot day and night. Prajāpatir vā idam eka āsīt. so 'kāmayata babuḥ syāṃ prajāyeyeti sa etam atirātram apaśyat tam āharat tenāhorātre prajāmayat. Elsewhere we come across the fact that the devas use all kind of rites to reach heaven, mostly after having a vision wherein the existence of the rite concerned, is disclosed to them²).

In note 2 I intentionally gave all those passages concerned with reaching heaven, because every book of the P. Br. seems to find it necessary to express this very thought: hymns and rites are so important as the devas themselves attained their heaven (implicitly may be surmised: devahood) by performing those rites and making use of those hymns. J. Br., though far less than P. Br., expresses the same opinion cf. § 22 rauraveṇa vai devā ūrdhvaḥ svargaṃ lokam ārohan. cf. also § 32 and § 81.

J. Up. Br. 1,15,3: 5: says the same, but 1,15,1: confirms my first theory that at least sometimes the devas were absolutely unable to reach and attain their ultimate end, heaven, except by the performance of rites: devā vai svargaṃ lokam āpsan. tam na layānā nāsinā na tiṣṭhanto na dhāvanto nai 'va kenacana karmaṇāpnuyun. They could not do so by sheer lack of power. Only as Prajāpati handed to them the ṛc-less sāmān, they were able to perform it. But they needed hymns and rites for quite a number of other ends. So P. Br. 4,5,2: 3: 9: for restoring the sun to heaven, cf. also P. Br. 4,6,13: 6,7,24: 12,10,6: 23,16,2: 24,6,2:; for restoring the collapsed day cf. P. Br. 12,3,10: 15,3,9: So Prajāpati needs those rites for the act of creation cf. P. Br. 6,1,1: 2: 8,5,6: and 6,3: cf. also 23,14,2: 23,9,2: 20,3,2: 4: and 25,6,2: Prajāpati gained endlessly by rites cf. P. Br. 23,11,2: and 23,25,2: 24,9,2:; he receives a firm support in this world cf. P. Br. 23,18,2: and he obtained all food cf. P. Br. 23,21,2: 23,27,1: So Prajāpati reached the fulfilment of all his wishes cf. P. Br. 24,7,2: He receives Vitality "Immortality" by those rites. cf. J. Up. Br. 3,40,1: (and the devas and ṛsis as well) tad etad amṛtaṃ gāyatrām etena vāi prajāpatir amṛtatvam agacchad etena devā etena ṛṣayah. Prajāpati wants them, in order to reach supremacy and paramountcy over devas and creatures cf. P. Br. 6,3,9: 16,16,2: 23,14,3: cf. also J. Br. § 18 katham nu id yā ahaṃ prajāḥ sṛjeya, tā mā sṛṣṭā nāpścāyeyur iti: "How and why does it happen that my own creatures refuse to honour me after being created?" Sa etat sāmāpāyat; tenāstuta: sa stauṣa ity eva nīdhanam

cf. also § 143, and § 182 relates that the devas were only able to defeat the asuras after practising tapas. J. Up. Br. 1,8,12: suggests that the devas after tapas became equal to Prajāpati. One more quotation from J. Up. Br. 2,1,2: where the devas are praised because they overcame death by udgātrā: te 'dbriyanta tenodgātrā dikṣāmahai yenāpahatya mṛtyum apahatya pāpmānaṃ svargaṃ lokam iyāmeti. cf. also J. Up. Br. 2,7,2.

j) The devas have no supremacy.

The late-Vedic Indian was quite convinced that the devas were not omnipotent. He expresses his conviction clearly. The devas fought for supremacy and acquired a partial paramouncy; thus Vāyu in P. Br. 23,13,2: as we mentioned already above.

But elsewhere we also find a number of passages where the devas fought for it and it is said that they could master it only by a conquest. P. Br. 7,8,2: presents Prajāpati and Agni discussing to whom a certain beautiful thing belonged. Indra and the viśve devas take part in the conversation. Only after compromising the debate was settled. So the devas attained their supremacy only by using a certain sāman and we must not forget that this supremacy is only over the animals. P. Br. 14,9,12; cf. also P. Br. 15,3,30: where we meet Varuṇa acquiring supremacy over the devas, but succeeding only after applying the devasthāna-sāman. The same we hear about Prajāpati in P. Br. 16,4,1: and Indra in 16,4,4: and though this paramount power has to be shared by three, this does not cause the slightest difficulty to the Indian mind in that age.

J. Br. tells how Prajāpati received his paramouncy § 18 and § 133. But this receiving of the supreme position never happens on account of inner dignity, but always because of a hymn or rite or even through knowledge cf. J. Up. Br. 1,1,1: 2: and 1,8,1: cf. also 2: 12; J. Up. Br. 1,50,1: also points the same way — only by battle and conquest the devas were able to rise to paramouncy.

Sometimes during my research I had the impression that every Brāhmaṇa made a point of proving that, however mighty and powerful the devas might have been, the rites and sacred hymns were far more powerful. And that only by applying those rites and by their inherent force, the devas could attain their deva-hood and deva-position.

k) The devas are not omniscient.

P. Br. 6,9,22: deals with the Gandharva Viśvāvasu, when he had stolen the soma and the devas searched for it everywhere. The devas apparently did not know where to find it: tam devatā anvaiścehan. The same we come across in P. Br. 14,4,7: where devas and Indra are at a loss to understand where the ṛsis might have gone. P. Br. 22,10,3:

is more dogmatic: yad vai manusyānām pratyakṣan tad devānām parokṣam atha yan manusyānām parokṣan tad devānām pratyakṣam: "what is evident to men is hidden to the devas and what is evident to the devas is hidden to the human beings". This expression that the gods like and love "the cryptic" is characteristic for primitive mentality. They have to point out to us some difference between devas and human beings, so they find a means for this by making their characteristics opposite or complementary. Vroklage in his Godsdienst der Primitieven (p. 55) states the same: "Bij vele primitieve volken leeft het besef, dat het in de andere wereld heel anders toe gaat" and he quotes J. D. v. d. Bergh MSC., speaking of the mentality of the people of Banggai who believe that what is high here, is low there, and what is above there is below here. Here one could conclude an important difference between devas and men. To us "men" the devas behave like foreigners and strangers. They see what we cannot see and they are unable to discern what is clear to earthly people. They live in another world. This implies of course a knowledge hidden to us, by which the devas are able to look into the depths of human hearts and what is in the future. Though never looked upon as omniscient the devas are still praised as being gifted with special knowledge.

In P. Br. 23,16,2: we meet the gods looking for a means of repair after the demon Svarbhānu committed some mischief. They are seeking and the 21 day-rite gives them relief. J. Br. mentions Prajāpati as unable to distinguish the different animals §52: tān (paśūn prajāpatir) ekarūpān na vyajānāt. And § 142 presents Indra after having killed Vṛtra, and he is greatly afraid and in great doubt about the result.

1) The devas are militant.

P. Br., J. Br. and J. Up. Br. seem to be very much impressed by the battle raging between devas and asuras. Every brāhmaṇa gives us numberless passages where this battle is described. It is a pity that all those passages are not known to us. What in those days there was going on between the Aryan invaders and the native defenders, both represented by their gods and protecting powers. I am still in doubt about the truth of it, as the same fight was going on in Iran and there the outcome was quite different. There the Asuras were winning, in India they were losing and yet the fact remains that the Aryan invaders were winning in both countries and overcame the native people. One might adhere to the opinion of Dr. Sri Nivasa in Anthropos, I, 1914, p. 1-15: the Aryans did not bring culture to India, but the native and dark-skinned Indian (or Dravidian) offered their highstanding culture to

cf. also § 143, and § 182 relates that the devas were only able to defeat the asuras after practising tapas. J. Up. Br. 1,8,12: suggests that the devas after tapas became equal to Prajāpati. One more quotation from J. Up. Br. 2,1,2: where the devas are praised because they overcame death by udgātrā: te 'dbriyanta tenodgātrā dikṣāmahai yenāpahatya mṛtyum apahatya pāpmānaṃ svargaṃ lokam iyāmeti. cf. also J. Up. Br. 2,7,2:

j) The devas have no supremacy.

The late-Vedic Indian was quite convinced that the devas were not omnipotent. He expresses his conviction clearly. The devas fought for supremacy and acquired a partial paramourty; thus Vāyu in P. Br. 23,13,2: as we mentioned already above.

But elsewhere we also find a number of passages where the devas fought for it and it is said that they could master it only by a conquest. P. Br. 7,8,2: presents Prajāpati and Agni discussing to whom a certain beautiful thing belonged. Indra and the viśve devas take part in the conversation. Only after compromising the debate was settled. So the devas attained their supremacy only by using a certain sāman and we must not forget that this supremacy is only over the animals. P. Br. 14,9,12; cf. also P. Br. 15,3,30: where we meet Varuṇa acquiring supremacy over the devas, but succeeding only after applying the devasthāna-sāman. The same we hear about Prajāpati in P. Br. 16,4,1: and Indra in 16,4,4: and though this paramount power has to be shared by three, this does not cause the slightest difficulty to the Indian mind in that age.

J. Br. tells how Prajāpati received his paramourty § 18 and § 133. But this receiving of the supreme position never happens on account of inner dignity, but always because of a hymn or rite or even through knowledge cf. J. Up. Br. 1,1,1: 2: and 1,8,1: cf. also 2: 12; J. Up. Br. 1,50,1: also points the same way — only by battle and conquest the devas were able to rise to paramourty.

Sometimes during my research I had the impression that every Brāhmaṇa made a point of proving that, however mighty and powerful the devas might have been, the rites and sacred hymns were far more powerful. And that only by applying those rites and by their inherent force, the devas could attain their deva-hood and deva-position.

k) The devas are not omniscient.

P. Br. 6,9,22: deals with the Gandharva Viśvāvasu, when he had stolen the soma and the devas searched for it everywhere. The devas apparently did not know where to find it: taṃ devatā antvaicchan. The same we come across in P. Br. 14,4,7: where devas and Indra are at a loss to understand where the ṛsis might have gone. P. Br. 22,10,3:

is more dogmatic: yad vai manusyānām pratyakṣan tad devānām paroḥṣam atha yan manusyānām paroḥṣan tad devānām pratyakṣam: "what is evident to men is hidden to the devas and what is evident to the devas is hidden to the human beings". This expression that the gods like and love "the cryptic" is characteristic for primitive mentality. They have to point out to us some difference between devas and human beings, so they find a means for this by making their characteristics opposite or complementary. Vroklage in his Godsdienst der Primitieven (p. 55) states the same: "Bij vele primitieve volken leeft het besef, dat het in de andere wereld heel anders toegaat" and he quotes J. D. v. d. Bergh MSC., speaking of the mentality of the people of Banggai who believe that what is high here, is low there, and what is above there is below here. Here one could conclude an important difference between devas and men. To us "men" the devas behave like foreigners and strangers. They see what we cannot see and they are unable to discern what is clear to earthly people. They think in terms of "above" and "below".

upon as omniscient the devas are still praised as being gifted with special knowledge.

In P. Br. 23,16,2: we meet the gods looking for a means of repair after the demon Svarbhānu committed some mischief. They are seeking and the 21 day-rite gives them relief. J. Br. mentions Prajāpati as unable to distinguish the different animals §52: tān (paśūn prajāpatir) ekarūpān na vyajānāt. And § 142 presents Indra after having killed Vṛtra, and he is greatly afraid and in great doubt about the result.

1) The devas are militant.

P. Br., J. Br. and J. Up. Br. seem to be very much impressed by the battle raging between devas and asuras. Every brāhmaṇa gives us numberless passages where this fearsome struggle is mentioned. It is a pity that all those passages cannot give us some clear conception of what in those days the Indians saw in this warfare. Scholars surmised here a story of the battle that was going on between the Aryan invaders and the native defenders, both represented by their gods and protecting powers. I am still in doubt about the truth of it, as the same fight was going on in Iran and there the outcome was quite different. There the Asuras were winning, in India they were losing and yet the fact remains that the Aryan invaders were winning in both countries and overcame the native people. One might adhere to the opinion of Dr. Sri Nivasa in Anthropos, I, 1914, p. 1-15: the Aryans did not bring culture to India, but the native and dark-skinned Indian (or Dravidian) offered their highstanding culture to the Aryan invaders. In short: in his opinion the south Indian Dravida is the cultured stock. We may remember here that Dr. Sri Nivasa himself is of Dravidian descent. There is a rift developping the last 60 years between the North and South Indian. It could be, anyhow, that the Aryans were forced to take over some devas of the substratum-population, where the Aryans invading Iran could keep up the cult of their own: the asuras. Notwithstanding Dr. Sri Nivasa's racial background there may be still a good deal of truth in his opinion. After all, nomadic life (the Aryan way of life till they settled in India) could not be accepted as the best substratum for "high culture", and not a few "Indian traits" in culture could be possibly explained by thorough research among those aboriginal tribes. However the author of the historia Mundi II seems to be right in believing that one should not over-value the influence of those oldest periods.

So what is at the back of this deva-asura struggle I dare not even suggest, especially as nowhere the context gives any indication for a certain direction nor can any hypothesis find good backing from citations.

Some texts relate only the struggle between devas and asuras in a matter-of-fact way, devāsura āspardhanta J. Br. § 14: 15: 26: 37: 49: 132: 174: 187:.. Elsewhere we find the fact mentioned that the devas won the battle cf. P. Br. 2,7,2: 3), and sometimes the texts give us the suggestion that the battle was very fierce and hard for the devas; cf. P. Br. 7,5,11: 9,1,1; etc., 12,5,23: 13,27: where we find that by Prajāpati's interference the devas won; cf. also P. Br. 22,17,2: 21,13,2: and J. Br. § 16: 22: 63: 67: 74: 155: 172: 182: and in J. Up. Br. 1,49,1: 2: "the Gods overcame every adverse force"; cf. P. Br. 13,7,10: also 13,8,1b: 4b: 5:.. The devas even fought death cf. J. Br. § 5. So we see that the devas fought a warfare about supremacy or about some possessions. The victory did go to the devas, but only after support and assistance from Prajāpati or else with the help of sacrifice, rites and hymns. Here we may also insert that the devas were lovers of races; cf. P. Br. 7,2,1: 9,1,35:..

But there are some worse traits in their bellicose attitude; they fought each other: cf. J. Br. § 136: ādityāi ca vā aṅgīraśa ca svarge loke āspardhanta. And J. Up. Br. 4,11,2: tāi śraīṣṭhye vyavudantā 'ham śreṣṭhā 'smi aham śreṣṭhā 'smi mām śriyam upādhvam iti.

m) In connexion with this topic the Brāhmaṇas also state that the devas can be hurtful to human beings cf. P. Br. 1,5,6: where we pray: soma rārandhi no hṛdi pitā nosi mama tan mā māhimih. Or P. Br. 6,5,12: where the devas curse at each other. Here the devas curse at the trees in which Vāc was hiding: "for they (the trees) had been cursed by the gods": devaśaptā hi.

n) To conclude the research on the more physical aspect of the devas we came to know in P. Br. 6,9,15: 16: that Prajāpati created the devas just like other creatures, and 16 does not exclude the danger of annihilation for the devas: yad eta iti tasmād yāvanta evāgre devās tāvanta idānīm "In that (he said) "these", therefore all the gods that (were) in the beginning (exist) even now." One could conclude that the Indians would not be surprised at all if the gods perished.

o) We might suggest a moral question. Do the Brāhmaṇas reveal to us devas with morals? This will give us some opportunity to learn what the Vedic Indian thought about sin.

P. Br. 1,6,10: devakṛtasyainaso 'vayajanam asi: "thou art the punishment of the sinner of the devas". It is a pity that there does not exist a Sanskrit text which says "guilt of the gods". Yet, some of the devas are mentioned on the same level as the devas. So the devas could have been considered to sin like every human being.

P. Br. 4,9,14: where the devas abuse Prajāpati of-course for his evil deeds. These wicked acts seem to have been widely known. Caland p. 66 of his translation of the P. Br. says: "the abusing of Prajāpati consists according to Drāhyāyana (9,4,17—18:) either in mentioning the evil deeds of Prajāpati, or in repeating the evil deeds done by Prajāpati as recorded by the Adhvaryus and the ṛgvedins. From the ṛgvedins is known the tale of the incest of Prajāpati (Ait. Br. 3,33: and S. Br. 1,7,4:)." But in P. Br. 8,2,10: we hear the old narration of Prajāpati's incestuous desires towards his daughter Uṣas: Prajāpatir uṣatam adhyat svām duhitaram, and we find it mentioned again in J. Br. § 207. We know that to the Indian mind killing is always murder. To kill someone in battle is a sin as every plain murder. So we find related that Indra was very upset about the fact that he gave the yatis as a prey to the hyenas; cf. P. Br. 14,11,29: 18,1,9: 19,4,7: and he deemed himself impure. So P. Br. 22,14,2: mentions Indra being anxious after slaying the asuras: "Indra having slain the asuras conceived that he had done an unheard-of deed". Especially since fratricide is a special crime in the eyes of the people of caste. J. Br. § 140 and 149 relate Indra to us as a thief. P. Br. 19,19,1: shows us Indra disturbed by ungodly illusions Indram adetyo māyā asatanta. Would this prove that the Indian in those days had some moral feelings about evil thoughts? Or could it be that P. Br. means to narrate implicitly about strange powers trying to master Indra? The commentators render māyā by cāṇānāḥ "illusions" or "hallucinations". Quite a number of Indian people believe that these illusions owe their origin to the demons or devils obsessing them for a short or longer while. Can this explain Indra's resort to Prajāpati?

J. Br. § 140 already gives us some list of sins: murder, someone to deliver to the wild animals and back answering Bṛhaspati. § 149 suggests theft (of the Maruts). Another epithet with unpleasant contents is the title: sorcerer of the devas: devānāṃ yātuh; cf. P. Br. 1,6,7:. In the Vedic age one did not like the sorcerers and even now-a-days one hates the so-called sorcerers and finds something immoral in their acts of sorcery.

p) After all these facts we ourselves would infer that there is no essential difference between devas and human beings, and even the Indian seems to feel the same way. In a great number of passages he states quite clearly that even human beings can reach the state of life granted to the devas, provided he makes use of the ways and means that are open to the devas. So:

1) "Immortality" or "vitality of the devas". P. Br. 1,8,2: says: Varuṇas tvā nayatu devi dakṣiṇe varuṇāyāśvaṃ tenāmṛtatvaṃ alīya vayo dātre bhūyān mayo mahyam pratigṛhītre: "Let Varuṇa lead thee, O divine Dakṣiṇa, the horse to Varuṇa. Thereby may I obtain vitality, may life fall to the share of the giver, joy to me the receiver". Yet, P. Br. 24,19,2: explains that man's immortality is, that he reaches the normal term of life, that he becomes wealthier: manuṣya-syāmṛtatvaṃ yat sarvaṃ āyur eti vaiyān bhavati. J. Br. § 108 expresses the idea mentioned above: that also we men are able to become "immortals": atha . . . te 'jāyanta (devās); te sarva eva sāṅgaḥ satanavo 'mṛtāḥ samabhavan; sarvo haivo sāṅgaḥ satanur amṛtaḥ sambhavati, ya evaṃ veda. So knowledge is the means that brought devas so far: so it will do us. J. Up. Br. 1,5,7: sa yathocchrāyam pratiyasya prapadyetaivam evaitayā devatayedam amṛtam abhiparyeti yatrāyam idaṃ tapīti "as one would approach an elevation, toiling towards it, even thus by means of this divinity one compasses this immortality where this one here burns". So also P. Br. 1,6,5: where we learn that we can reach those qualities of "immortality" by knowledge; cf. P. Br. 1,18,10: where the sacred syllable om and sacrifice are the means (P. Br. 1,22,8:).

2) The human beings can attain deva-hood like the devas themselves. P. Br. 17,14,2: yadā samvatsarasya grhapatir bhavaty atha vaiśvadevasya mātṛāṃ āpnoti "when he becomes the master of the house of the year (by the agnihotra) he reaches the measure of the vaiśvadeva". So P. Br. 18,2,10: teaches us that through the deity sonia one comes to the deities: devatayaiva devatā apyeti"); cf. also J. Br. § 127 ud vyaṃ tamasaḥ pari suvaḥ paśyanto jyotiḥ uttarāṃ devaṃ devatrā sūryaṃ aganma jyotiḥ uttamāṃ ity etāṃ japaṃ udaity; and J. Up. Br. 3,26,5: (ṛptir) taṃ devān abhipravahati: "satisfaction carries him forth to the devas". And J. Up. Br. 3,33,3: atha ya enā adhyātman upāste sa hā 'ntidevo bhavati: "Now if anyone worships them with regard to self, he becomes the one who is near the devas".

3) Even human beings are able to attain heaven.

P. Br. 2,6,2: etayā vai devāḥ svargam lokam āyan svargakūmaḥ stutvā svargasya lokasya samāptyai svargāḥ lokān na cyavate tustuvānah. "By means of this (viṣṭuti) the devas went to the world of heaven; one who wishes for the world of heaven, should practise this for reaching the world of heaven. After heaving practised this he does not fall forth from the world of heaven"; cf. also P. Br. 5,7,8: 10,3,10: (by soma) 12,4,14: (by the sathantara and bṛhat) 17,13,18: (by a barley sacrifice) 18,6,4: 8: (by the Vājapeya rite) 18,7,1: 10,5. J. Br. § 168 ascertains: te devā devayānena patbaitam svargam lokam gacchannāgamān manasyānām abibhayaḥ. "The devas having reached heaven following the devapath, they were afraid that man would follow them." So the devas did not see any intrinsic impossibility in the fact, that also human beings could go the way of the devas. J. Up. Br. 1,3,2: might also point that same way. 3,14,9: says: that the udgātā brings the sacrificers to the world of the god (the sun) by sacrifice. J. Up. Br. 4,3,10: one reaches heaven through true knowledge; cf. also: 10,1,12.

4) Also human beings are able to conquer their enemies in the same way the devas did. P. Br. 2,7,2: etayā vai devā asurān atya-kṛāmann atī pāpmānam bhṛāśtroyam kṛāmati ya etayā stute: "By means of this (viṣṭuti) the gods overcame the Asuras. He, who practices this in chanting, overcomes his wicked rival"; cf. also P. Br. 19,16,2: 18,2: 19,2: 20,8,1ca. I want to stress this point: man can do what the devas are able to do, if only he uses the same means. Every passage of those texts reveals this point clearly. However, one might add that the devas always found or invented the rites and they enabled also men to make use of them. Man repeats what the devas invented or "saw" in a vision.

5) I encountered one passage which even indicates that he who follows Prajāpati in chanting the "horse song", will be able to follow Prajāpati in his act of creation. P. Br. 11,3,5: asvo vai bhūtvā prajā-patē prajā sṛjāta sa prājāyāta bahur abhavat prajāyate bahur bha-sary alicens tustuvānah.

6) How do human beings succeed in attaining the state or position of the devas?

a) by knowledge: Here we come across the well-known expression of the Upanisads ya etayā veda cf. P. Br. 4,8,10: 16,4,2: J. Br. § 7:

J. Br. § 140 already gives us some list of sins: murder, someone to deliver to the wild animals and back answering Brhaspati. § 149 suggests theft (of the Maruts). Another epithet with unpleasant contents is the title: sorcerer of the devas: devānāṃ yātuh; cf. P. Br. 1,6,7: In the Vedic age one did not like the sorcerers and even now-a-days one hates the so-called sorcerers and finds something immoral in their acts of sorcery.

p) After all these facts we ourselves would infer that there is no essential difference between devas and human beings, and even the Indian seems to feel the same way. In a great number of passages he states quite clearly that even human beings can reach the state of life granted to the devas, provided he makes use of the ways and means that are open to the devas. So:

1) "Immortality" or "vitality of the devas". P. Br. 1,8,2: says: Varuṇas tvā nayatn devi dakṣiṇe varuṇyāyāsvam tenāmṛtatvam aśīya vayo dātre bhūyān mayo mahyam pratigṛhītre: "Let Varuṇa lead thee, O divine Dakṣiṇa, the horse to Varuṇa. Thereby may I obtain vitality, may life fall to the share of the giver, joy to me the receiver". Yet, P. Br. 24,19,2: explains that man's immortality is, that he reaches the normal term of life, that he becomes wealthier: manuṣya-syāmṛtatvam yat sarvam āyur eti vaiśyān bhavati. J. Br. § 108 expresses the idea mentioned above: that also we men are able to become "immortals": atha . . . te 'jāyanta (devās); te sarva eva sāṅgāḥ satanavo 'mṛtāḥ sambhavan; sarvo haivo sāṅgāḥ satanur amṛtāḥ sambhavati, ya evaṃ veda. So knowledge is the means that brought devas so far: so it will do us. J. Up. Br. 1,5,7: sa yathocchrāyam pratiyasya prapadyetaivam evaitayā devatayedam amṛtam abhiparyeti yatrāyam idam taptīti "as one would approach an elevation, toiling towards it, even thus by means of this divinity one compasses this immortality where this one here burns". So also P. Br. 1,6,5: where we learn that we can reach those qualities of "immortality" by knowledge; cf. P. Br. 1,18,10: where the sacred syllable om and sacrifice are the means (P. Br. 1,22,8:).

2) The human beings can attain deva-hood like the devas themselves. P. Br. 17,14,2: yadā samvatsarasya grhapatir bhavaty atha vaiśvadevasya mātṛm āpnoti "when he becomes the master of the house of the year (by the agnihotra) he reaches the measure of the vaiśvadeva". So P. Br. 18,2,10: teaches us that through the deity roma one comes to the deities: devatayaiva devatā apyeti"); cf. also J. Br. § 127 ud vāyam tamasaḥ pari sruvāḥ pśiyanto jyotir uttaram deṇam devatrā sūryam aganma jyotir uttamam ity etām japsann udayti; and J. Up. Br. 3,26,5: (taptīr) tam devān abhipracavati: "satisfaction carries him forth to the devas". And J. Up. Br. 3,33,3: atha ya enā adhyātmam upāste sa hā 'ntidevo bhavati: "Now if anyone worships them with regard to self, he becomes the one who is near the devas".

3) Even human beings are able to attain heaven.

P. Br. 2,6,2: etayā vai devāḥ svargam lokam āyan svargakāmaḥ stvita svargasya lokasya samastyai svargāḥ lokān na cyavate tustuvānah. "By means of this (viṣṭuti) the devas went to the world of heaven; one who wishes for the world of heaven, should practise this for reaching the world of heaven. After heaving practised this he does not fall forth from the world of heaven"; cf. also P. Br. 5,7,8: 10,3,10: (by soma) 12,4,14: (by the rathantara and bṛhat) 17,13,18: (by a barley sacrifice) 18,6,4: 8: (by the Vājapeya rite) 18,7,1: 10,5: J. Br. § 168 ascertains: te devā devayānena pāthaitam svargam lokam gacchantvāgamān manuyānām abibhayaḥ. "The devas having reached heaven following the devapath, they were afraid that man would follow them." So the devas did not see any intrinsic impossibility in the fact, that also human beings could go the way of the devas. J. Up. Br. 1,3,2: might also point that same way. 3,14,9: says: that the udgātā brings the sacrificers to the world of the god (the sun) by sacrifice. J. Up. Br. 4,3,10: one reaches heaven through true knowledge; cf. also: 10,1,12:.

4) Also human beings are able to conquer their enemies in the same way the devas did. P. Br. 2,7,2: etayā vai devā āsurān atya-kṛmān atī pāpmānam bhrātrvyam kṛmāti ya etayā stute: "By means of this (viṣṭuti) the gods overcame the Asuras. He, who practices this in chanting, overcomes his wicked rival"; cf. also P. Br. 19,16,2: 18,2: 19,2: 20,8,1c: I want to stress this point: man can do what the devas are able to do, if only he uses the same means. Every passage of those texts reveals this point clearly. However, one might add that the devas always found or invented the rites and they enabled also men to make use of them. Man repeats what the devas invented or "saw" in a vision.

5) I encountered one passage which even indicates that he who follows Prajāpati in chanting the "horse song", will be able to follow Prajāpati in his act of creation. P. Br. 11,3,5: asvo vai bhūtvā prajā-patīḥ prajā arjasa sa prājyate babur abhavat prajāyate babur bhavaty asitva tustuvānah.

6) How do human beings succeed in attaining the state or position of the devas?

a) by knowledge: Here we come across the well-known expression of the Upanisads ya evam veda cf. P. Br. 4,8,10: 16,4,2: J. Br. § 7:

J. Br. § 140 already gives us some list of sins: murder, someone to deliver to the wild animals and back answering Bṛhaspati. § 149 suggests theft (of the Maruts). Another epithet with unpleasant contents is the title: sorcerer of the devas: devānāṃ yātuh; cf. P. Br. 1,6,7: In the Vedic age one did not like the sorcerers and even now-a-days one hates the so-called sorcerers and finds something immoral in their acts of sorcery.

p) After all these facts we ourselves would infer that there is no essential difference between devas and human beings, and even the Indian seems to feel the same way. In a great number of passages he states quite clearly that even human beings can reach the state of life granted to the devas, provided he makes use of the ways and means that are open to the devas. So:

1) "Immortality" or "vitality of the devas". P. Br. 1,8,2: says: Varuṇas tvā nayatu devī dakṣiṇe varuṇyāśvaṃ tenāmṛtatvaṃ aśiya vayo dātre bhūyān mayo mahyam pratigṛhītre: "Let Varuṇa lead thee, O divine Dakṣiṇa, the horse to Varuṇa. Thereby may I obtain vitality, may life fall to the share of the giver, joy to me the receiver". Yet, P. Br. 24,19,2: explains that man's immortality is, that he reaches the normal term of life, that he becomes wealthier: manuṣya-syāmṛtatvaṃ yat sarvaṃ āyur eti vaśiṇā bhavati. J. Br. § 108 expresses the idea mentioned above: that also we men are able to become "immortals": atha . . . te 'jāyanta (devās); te sarva eva sāṅgāḥ satanavo 'mṛtāḥ samabbhavan; sarvo haivo sāṅgāḥ satanur amṛtaḥ sambhavadati, ya evaṃ veda. So knowledge is the means that brought devas so far: so it will do us. J. Up. Br. 1,5,7: sa yathocchrāyaṃ pratiyasya prapadyetaivaṃ evaitayā devatayedam amṛtam abhiparyeti yatrāyaṃ idam taptīti "as one would approach an elevation, toiling towards it, even thus by means of this divinity one compasses this immortality where this one here burns". So also P. Br. 1,6,5: where we learn that we can reach those qualities of "immortality" by knowledge; cf. P. Br. 1,18,10: where the sacred syllable om and sacrifice are the means (P. Br. 1,22,8:).

2) The human beings can attain deva-hood like the devas themselves. P. Br. 17,14,2: yadā samvatsarasya gṛhapatir bhavaty atha vaiśvadevāya mātṛām āpnōti "when he becomes the master of the house of the year (by the agnihotra) he reaches the measure of the vaiśvadeva". So P. Br. 18,2,10: teaches us that through the deity soma one comes to the deities: devatayaiva devatā apyēti *); cf. also J. Br. § 127 ud vāyaṃ tamatas pari sūtaḥ pśiṃanto jyotir uttaram devāṃ devatrā sūryam aganma jyotir uttamam ity etām jaganm udayti; and J. Up. Br. 3,26,5: (tīptir) taṃ devān abhipravahati: "satisfaction

4. We came across a number of epithets only used a few times.

P. Br. 1,2,9: "the Goddess i.e. prayer is beautiful and swift"; so P. Br. 1,3,5: praises Agni's brilliancy and Sūrya's splendour. Thus J. Up. Br. 4,11,1: praises six devatās: Agni, Vāyu, Sun, Breath, Food, and Speech as: selfexisting svayambhū. In J. Br. § 44 Agni receives the title of protector: īam agnih sudīṭaye chardir ity evābhyamiṣat. The Aśvins are lauded because they release the convicts J. Br. § 176 aśvinā u ha vai devānām baddhamucan, and they cure the sick: cf. J. Br. § 186 aśvinan vai tan darvibomīnan bhiṣajyantan. So Varuṇa is praised as the great protector J. Up. Br. 4,1,2-6.

The devas give wealth to us, P. Br. 1,7,6: (Agni) 14,6,4: (Indra) J. Up. Br. 1,35,4: (Prajāpati) śriyam vah prayaccheyam: "I shall bestow wealth upon you".

Some of the devas have a train of followers: that is: Indra having the Maruts following him everywhere; P. Br. 6,10,10: cf. also J. Br. § 149: The Maruts also belong to the subjects of the gods; cf. P. Br. 18,1,14.

3. The number of the devas.

Several times one encounters the phrase that in the beginning Prajāpati was alone; cf. P. Br. 4,1,4: Prajāpatir vā idam eka āsīt.

Elsewhere we find the number of the devas mentioned as being 31: cf. P. Br. 4,4,11: 8,14: 6,2,5: 10,1,16: 22,7,4: 24,1,13: and often it is said that Prajāpati is the 34th deva; cf. P. Br. 17,11,3: 24,4,3.

We also find a number of passages where Prajāpati is called seven-teenfold; cf. P. Br. 4,5,6. Elsewhere the devas are called "many", cf. J. Br. § 133 and somewhat unusual is J. Up. Br. 3,1,1: ekā ha vāta kṛtsnā devatā 'rhaddevatā evā 'nyāḥ: "there is one entire devatā. the others are ...".

Consequently the devas are not to be regarded as mere human beings, but as beings of a superhuman nature as was the case in the sections of RV. and AV. Practically nowhere the quotations reveal to us a truly immeasurable force hiding in the devas. The epithets related above are merely an echo of the former periods. In themselves the devas are not less human nor more human than is indicated by the first adjectives mentioned on the first pages of this chapter.

6. Have the devas any divine qualities?

One may believe that in the somadraught the Indians saw the drink reserved for the devas. Also the Brāhmaṇas relate to us that Soma is king and also highly revered. It is mostly Indra who is mentioned as the drinker of soma. Cf. P. Br. 1,5,4: 5: 16: 6,1: 2:

14: 64: 108: J. Up. Br. 2,11,14; which we also often meet in the Brāhmaṇas S. Br. 4,3,89:.

b) by tapas: P. Br. 25,14,3: atha yat tapas tapyate yā daivi tam tena, "in that he gives himself over to asceticism, thereby he gets the welfare that is of the gods."

c) by the sāman: cf. P. Br. 15,5,30: "he attains power and greatness like Akūpara Kaśyapa" and in 16,14,4: "he conquers these worlds"; cf. P. Br. 24,12,4: 8: "he will thrive like the devas" and 24,17,2: 3: "he will acquire power and force". 25,11,3: "strongest one like Indra and Agni". There are several passages where devas and human beings are mentioned on the same level; cf. J. Br. § 47 devāḥ pitaro manuṣyāḥ te 'nyata āsann, asurā rakṣāṃṣi piśācā anyatas; ta eṣu lokeṣu aspar-dhanta; "devas, ancestors an men took their side, and asuras, pisacas and rakṣasas took theirs. And they fought a heavy battle in the Universe". And J. Br. § 86 yad dha vā iha devebhyah karoti, tad asmai devāḥ kurvanti. Caland translating comments, "was er (d.h. der Verrichter des Opfers) hier (auf der Erde) für die Götter tut, das tun die Götter für ihn"; cf. also J. Br. § 92: 144: 200: 209: and also J. Up. Br. 1,3,2: 31,9: 4,1: 3,5,1:.

q) The relation between the devas is very often expressed in terms like father, child etc. So J. Br. § 144: atho sarve vāva ima prājāpatyāḥ and in P. Br. 1,5,6: soma is called "our father" soma rārandhi no hṛdi pitā no'si mama tan mā māhimsih. However, this may be no more than a usual metaphorical expression which surely does not point out a parental connexion among the devas.

The devas have children: bṛhat is like an eldest son to Prajāpati. P. Br. 7,6,6: 18,1,2: devāica va asurāica prajāpatir devayāḥ putrā āsan; cf. also J. Up. Br. 3,30,3: So Agni is born in rites P. Br. 14,2,3:.

The devas take their brides J. Br. § 35: āpo vai devānām patnaya āsan. And they are thought to beget in human manner J. Br. § 35 tā mithunam āicchantā.

3. Now we may proceed to consider a series of epithets that certainly point to something more than human in the concept of deva. We hear of Varuṇa that he is powerful and vigorous cf. P. Br. 1,3,3: tān Varuṇa apadhamat: "Varuṇa just blew them away". Some passages speak of Indra's vigour Indrasyendriyena cf. P. Br. 1,3,5: 6,1: 8,1,5: 9,7,5: 8: 14,12,3: 24,17,2: 25,11,3: cf. also J. Up. Br. 1,28,2: 44,1: So about Soma: P. Br. 1,5,4: 6,1: 6:.

4. We came across a number of epithets only used a few times.

P. Br. 1,2,9: "the Goddess i.e. prayer is beautiful and swift"; so P. Br. 1,3,5: praises Agni's brilliancy and Sūrya's splendour. Thus J. Up. Br. 4,11,1: praises six devatās: Agni, Vāyu, Sun, Breath, Food, and Speech as selfexisting svayambhū. In J. Br. § 44 Agni receives the title of protector: tam agniḥ suditaye chardir ity evābhyamṛjat. The Aśvins are lauded because they release the convicts J. Br. § 176 āvinā m ha vai devānāṃ baddhamucan, and they cure the sick: cf. J. Br. § 186 āvinā vai tau dardibhominān bhiṣajyantan. So Varuṇa is praised as the great protector J. Up. Br. 4,1,2-6.

The devat give wealth to us, P. Br. 1,7,6: (Agni) 14,6,4: (Indra) J. Up. Br. 1,55,4: (Prajāpati) īriyam vah prayaccheyam: "I shall bestow wealth upon you".

Some of the devas have a train of followers: that is: Indra having the Maruts following him everywhere; P. Br. 6,10,10: cf. also J. Br. § 149. The Maruts also belong to the subjects of the gods; cf. P. Br. 18,1,14.

5. The number of the devas.

Several times one encounters the phrase that in the beginning Prajāpati was alone; cf. P. Br. 4,1,4: Prajāpatir vā idam eka āsit.

Elsewhere we find the number of the devas mentioned as being 33: cf. P. Br. 4,4,11: 8,14: 6,2,5: 10,1,16: 22,7,4: 24,1,13: and often it is said that Prajāpati is the 34th deva; cf. P. Br. 17,11,3: 24,4,3.

We also find a number of passages where Prajāpati is called seven-teenfold; cf. P. Br. 4,5,6. Elsewhere the devas are called "many", cf. J. Br. § 133 and somewhat unusual is J. Up. Br. 3,1,1: ekā ha vāta kṛṣṇā devatā 'rdhadevatā evā 'nyāḥ: "there is one entire devatā, the others are half-devatā" and we find them summed up as: sun, moon, stars, fire, day and night, regions and the rain.

Concluding I cannot say that the epithets summed up above are as convincing of a superhuman nature as was the case in the sections of RV. and AV. Practically nowhere the quotations reveal to us a truly immeasurable force hiding in the devas. The epithets related above are merely an echo of the former periods. In themselves the devas are not less human nor more human than is indicated by the first adjectives mentioned on the first pages of this chapter.

6. Have the devas any divine qualities?

One may believe that in the somadraught the Indians saw the drink reserved for the devas. Also the Brāhmaṇas relate to us that Soma is king and also highly revered. It is mostly Indra who is mentioned as the drinker of soma. Cf. P. Br. 1,5,4: 5: 16: 6,1: 2:

14: 64: 108: J. Up. Br. 2,11,14; which we also often meet in the Brāhmaṇas S. Br. 4,3,89:.

b) by tapas: P. Br. 25,14,3: atha yat tapas tapyate yā daivi tam tena, "in that he gives himself over to asceticism, thereby he gets the welfare that is of the gods."

c) by the sāman: cf. P. Br. 15,5,30: "he attains power and greatness like Akūpara Kasyapa" and in 16,14,4: "he conquers these worlds"; cf. P. Br. 24,12,4: 8: "he will thrive like the devas" and 24,17,2: 3: "he will acquire power and force". 25,11,3: "strongest one like Indra and Agni". There are several passages where devas and human beings are mentioned on the same level; cf. J. Br. § 47 devāḥ pitaro manuṣyāś te 'nyata āsann, asurā rakṣāṃśi piśācā anyatas; ta eṣu lokeṣu aspar-dhanta: "devas, ancestors and men took their side, and asuras, piśacas and rakṣasas took theirs. And they fought a heavy battle in the Universe". And J. Br. § 86 yad dha vā iha devebhyaḥ karoti, tad asmai devāḥ kurvanti. Caland translating comments, "was er (d.h. der Verrichter des Opfers) hier (auf der Erde) für die Götter tut, das tun die Götter für ihn"; cf. also J. Br. § 92: 144: 200: 209: and also J. Up. Br. 1,3,2: 31,9: 4,1: 3,5,1:.

q) The relation between the devas is very often expressed in terms like father, child etc. So J. Br. § 144: atho tarve vāva ima prajāpatyāḥ and in P. Br. 1,5,6: soma is called "our father" soma rārandhi no hṛdi pitā no'si mama tan mā māhimsiḥ. However, this may be no more than a usual metaphorical expression which surely does not point out a parental connexion among the devas.

The devas have children: brhat is like an eldest son to Prajāpati. P. Br. 7,6,6: 18,1,2: devāśca va asurāśca prajāpatir devayāḥ putrā āsan; cf. also J. Up. Br. 3,30,3: So Agni is born in rites P. Br. 14,2,3:.

The devas take their brides J. Br. § 35: āpo vai devānām patnaya āsan. And they are thought to beget in human manner J. Br. § 35 tā mithunam aicchanta.

3. Now we may proceed to consider a series of epithets that certainly point to something more than human in the concept of deva. We hear of Varuṇa that he is powerful and vigorous cf. P. Br. 1,3,3: tān Varuṇa apadhamat: "Varuṇa just blew them away". Some passages speak of Indra's vigour Indrasyendriyena cf. P. Br. 1,3,5: 6,1: 8,1,5: 9,7,5: 8: 14,12,3: 24,17,2: 25,11,3: cf. also J. Up. Br. 1,28,2: 44,1: So about Soma: P. Br. 1,5,4: 6,1: 6:.

Brahman; cf. J. Up. Br. 3,38,1: Prajāpatiṃ brahmā 'srjata. tam āpaśyam amukham asrjata.

d) The devas ward off evil.

P. Br. 14,8,6: pāpmāṣm agbman: "the gods had incited Indra, by means of the ninth they had repelled evil"; cf. P. Br. 15,2,7b.

I do not know whether evil has to be taken in a moral sense here or merely as ill-luck or physical misfortune.

e) The Brāhmanas sometimes make mention of the remission of sin. P. Br. 1,6,10: "soma is the annulment of guilt, gathered by the devas, by man and his ancestors": enaso 'vayaśnam asi. P. Br. 14,11,28: presents Indra to us after having slain the asuras and feeling loaded with sin. The devas performed a sacrifice: "He thereby was freed of his bad lot".

It is also worth noticing that there is no talk about remorse and contrition in Indra. The devas are not the persons who forgive, but they take a hand in it by performing rites. Thus P. Br. 14,11,28: does not state that the devas forgave Indra, but that he became purified. Something similar we meet in J. Up. Br. 2,12,1: yatro ha vai kṛacaitā devasā nispṛanti, na baita tatra kalcana pāpmā nyaṅgaḥ parisiṣyate: "whosoever these divinities touch, there no evil trace whatever will be left". Moreover J. Br. § 207 presents Rudra to us, asking why he has been created. And the answer is: yo 'tipādayāt taṃ haṇtā iti: "whosoever sins, you shall kill him (for punishment)".

f) Another quality of the devas is, that they live and ascend to heaven.

P. Br. 1,7,6: teaches that Agni goes to heaven where he meets the cheerful devas. The gods ascend to heaven with the help of a sacred chant cf. P. Br. 15,9,14: cf. also P. Br. 19,11,6: 20,11,3: or they reach heaven by a sacrifice P. Br. 16,12,1' or a sacred metre of the chants P. Br. 17,1,1: So also J. Br. § 175 ūrdhvān vā anye lokān devāi caratyai cājyan and J. Up. Br. 3,19,2: devā vā anayā trayyā (tridyayā) iśasayo 'rdhvās svargam lokam udakrāman. Again we may notice: not by their own strength but by the Vedas; cf. also J. Up. Br. 4,13,10: tenā 'pabasya mṛtyum apabasya pāpmāṣam svargam lokam āyat. Sometimes we even read that the devas are living in the āman: cf. J. Up. Br. 1,13,7: 14,1: or in the anuṣṭubh: J. Up. Br. 1,18,7.

g) The devas are "immortal (extremely vital)" or else gained this "vitality".

P. Br. 8,2,6: "The Atharvans forsooth desiring to reach the world, saw this āman: they by means of it saw the world of immortality". The devas received this vitality from Prajāpati cf. P. Br. 22,12,1b:

18,5,2: P. Br. 6,5,1: and J. Br. § 86: praises soma by: annam aha vai devānām somo rājā "There king Soma is the nourishment of the devas".

b) The devas were thought to have power over life and death.

P. Br. 14,4,7: tān etena sāmā samairayat: "and they revived them by means of this sāman". So P. Br. 14,6,10: narrates about the rejuvenating power of the Aśvins: punar yuvānam akurutām! But always by means of the sāman. The same power is mentioned, in J. Br. § 197: tenainam samairayat and § 198 taṁ samairayat; tad etad bheṣajam prāyaścittih sāma. J. Up. Br. 2,7,5: suggests some power in wealth and authority.

c) The devas created the universe.

Prajāpati is generally mentioned as the creator. He always desires to have someone for company as he feels lonely; cf. P. Br. 4,1,15: So he longs for progeny and we learn that the Indians saw creation as an act of generation; cf. P. Br. 6,1,1: Prajāpati desired: "may I be more (than one), may I be reproduced. He saw that agniṣṭoma and practised it; by it he created the creatures". This certainly suggests that we may have to see the act of creating as a kind of sacrificial rite.

Elsewhere we come across a multitude of passages in which reference is made to Prajāpati's creating act. So we meet the expression that Prajāpati created the creatures: Prajāpatih . . . prajā arjāta; cf. P. Br. 6,1,1: 6: 8: 10: 11: 5).

Prajāpati created the devas P. Br. 6,19,5: 6) and the domestic animals P. Br. 8,5,6: etc. He is also the creator of the hymns and metres, of sacrifice and of man 7). It is interesting to read in P. Br. 20,14,2: 7: that Prajāpati being all alone by himself and being the Universe, his first act of creation was emitting the Word: Vāc; and this word streamed through the entire Universe. According to P. Br. 20,16,1: Prajāpati apparently formed what is on this earth: idam vāva prathamēnāhnā vyakarod yad idam aśyām adhy āyat-tamūlam idam. "On the first day he formed what here on this (earth) is firmly rooted: on the second day all living beings that move (on the earth and through the intermediate region): on the third day the rain that falls yonder, the stars and what belongs to yonder world." At first sight one could believe that there has been a slight influence from holy Writ, but P. Br. 20,16,2: takes all likelihood of that away. At times we read that the devas created the vajra cf. J. Br. § 26 and Rudra § 207.

In J. Up. Br. 3,2,11: Prajāpati is called bhucanastya gopā: "the guardian of creation". But it seems that the Upaniṣad period was not contented with Prajāpati as the creator. His originator was

1) It seems that a class of gods, called sādhyas, has perished.

They were devas: cf. P. Br. 8,3,5: sādhyā vai nāma devā āsāt; cf. also P. Br. 8,4,1: 9; and the same are explicitly mentioned in 25,8,2: sādhyā vai nāma devebhya devāḥ pātus āsāt. We do not learn anything particular about them. Only the fact is mentioned. Yet, S. Br. 13,4,2,16: calls the sādhyas the guardians of a region; cf. also S. Br. 3,7,1,26.

7. I want to close this section on the Brāhmaṇas by giving a few details about some devas in particular.

1) We hear Indra called as usual: Vṛtrabha; cf. P. Br. 9,4,3; Maghātṛ P. Br. 9,10,1; J. Up. Br. 4,5,1; and also in the same passage vajrāt deva, Vṛtrakan and ugra deva. Numberless times we encounter these traits of Indra's character. His personality did not change much in this last part of the Vedic period. He is still the "mighty one".

2) Agni is the dūta or "messenger of the gods".

Cf. J. Br. § 136, but for the first time we hear that he is Prajāpati's eldest son cf. J. Up. Br. 1,51,5; and that he came forth from the mouth of Prajāpati cf. J. Br. § 9. Once he was Vāc (J. Up. Br. 2,2,1).

if only we care for him (J. Up. Br. 2,14). He is the sāman (J. Up. Br. 3,6,7) and the abhiṣṭ (J. Up. Br. 3,20,1) and so he is also called "world-conquering" lokaṣṭ and "food-eater" annāda. Elsewhere he is called "most voracious" J. Up. Br. 2,15. He is the mouth of the gṛyati (J. Up. Br. 4,11,5). So he is

cf. J. Up. Br. 2,14; also in those days for Agni. J. Up. Br. 2,14: gives all these reasons for the worship of Agni. Who serves Agni well in this world, Agni will serve him in yonder world. One should not touch him with hand or feet nor with a stick: that means: do not wash yourself near a fire: do not stretch your feet towards a fire. Truly Agni makes such a person comfortable sudhāyām ita 'vamaṃ dadhāti. Agni is always at the service of mankind here and hereafter. Then J. Up. Br. 4,11,5: 6: let Agni tell us: aham aśmy anyāsām prajānām mahām. As he serves the devas, he also serves the human race.

3) Prajāpati really holds a special place in these Brāhmaṇas. Sometimes he gives the impression of being the Supreme Being. But this

(through a rite) cf. also P. Br. 23,12,2: 24,19,2: J. Up. Br. 1,11,8: says, that Prajāpati gave them the udgītha, therefore they are immortal. Udgītham devebhyo 'mṛtam. tasmād te 'mṛtāḥ; cf. also J. Br. § 108 — through sacrifice — and § 143: ṛtena hi te tad amṛtam anuvavindan. Yet, here no reference is made to rites or chants but it is ṛta, the power that governs the universe, that renders supranormal vitality to the devas. J. Up. Br. 1,18,10: says that the devas reached "immortality" with the help of the sacred syllable om.

h) Some of the devas are said to possess, or to have acquired supremacy over other devas or the Universe. So we meet Varuṇa, P. Br. 13,9,23: with the help of a sāman he attained paramouncy, P. Br. 15,3,30: by the devasthāna; cf. also J. Br. § 188.

Prajāpati is the supreme being and this is, as far as we are able to see, generally acknowledged throughout our sources; cf. P. Br. 16,4,1: 18,1,1: (implicitly in the context) 19,13,3: 22,18,4: and also J. Br. § 77: 161: 182: (implicitly in the context). Thus to Indra: P. Br. 16,4,3: 19,16,2: 22,8,2: 24,17,2: 25,1,9: 11,2: 3: cf. also J. Up. Br. 4,21,2: and J. Br. § 115: 139: 141: J. Up. Br. 1,9,2: om itindro vāg iti sarve devāḥ. tad etad indram eva sarve devā anuyanti. A few times Agni is mentioned as the supreme Lord; cf. P. Br. 25,11,2: 3: J. Up. Br. 3,6,7: sa iraiṣṭhyāyā 'dhipatyūyā 'nnādyāya purodhāyai jāyate. But J. Br. brings the devas back to the position of creatures J. Br. § 168 eṣā ha vai devānām rājñi yac chraddhā; saṣṭa prātar upakramya tiṣṭhati; tāṃ devā napatīṣṭhante: yadricy ctyati tadṛyāṣṭa eṣyāma iti; tatyai sarve devā anuvartmānaḥ sāyam juṣante; tām āvīlati sa juhōti, sa yajate; tad devā napativanti. "Die gläubige Gesinnung soll nicht von euch weichen. Die gläubige Gesinnung ist die Herrscherin der Götter. Morgens früh kommt sie heran: die Götter stellen sich ehrerbietig vor sie, denkend: "Nach welcher Richtung gewandt sie kommen wird, dahin gerichtet werden wir gehen. Ihr dienend genießen abends alle Götter. In diese tritt er ein, er gießt Spenden aus, er bringt Verehrung dar: davon leben die Götter" (Caland, p. 227).

i) These devas are offered to.

P. Br. 1,6,4: iṣṭayajuṣas te deva soma, itustastomasya: "O divine soma to whom formulas and chants have been offered". So P. Br. 15,5,9: where Agni is praised: Agniṃ vai pūrvair abhūir ājuhōty and J. Br. § 6 says: nibhutam devān rādhyāniti ha prajājanṣa. The devas love the praises and offerings offered to them. Moreover sacrifice is a strengthening power for the devas; cf. J. Up. Br. 1,9,3: etena (the syllable om) vai samsate parasye 'ndram vṛjita: "by it and a simultaneous soma-offering one could force Indra away from his rival".

3) It seems that a class of gods, called sādhyas, has perished.

They were devas: cf. P. Br. 8,3,5: sādhyā vai nāma devā āsan; cf. also P. Br. 8,4,1: 9: and the same are explicitly mentioned in 25,8,2: sādhyā vai nāma devābhyo devābhyo pūrva āsan. We do not learn anything particular about them. Only the fact is mentioned. Yet, S. Br. 13,4,2,16: calls the sādhyas the guardians of a region; cf. also S. Br. 3,7,1,26.

7. I want to close this section on the Brāhmaṇas by giving a few details about some devas in particular.

1) We hear Indra called as usual: Vṛṣabha; cf. P. Br. 9,4,3: Maghavant P. Br. 9,10,1: J. Up. Br. 4,5,1:, and also in the same passage rajin deva, Vṛtrahan and ugra deva. Numberless times we encounter these traits of Indra's character. His personality did not change much in this late part of the Vedic period. He is still the "mighty one".

2) Agni is the dūta or "messenger of the gods".

Cf. J. Br. § 136, but for the first time we hear that he is Prajāpati's eldest son cf. J. Up. Br. 1,51,5: and that he came forth from the mouth of Prajāpati cf. J. Br. § 9. Once he was Vāc (J. Up. Br. 2,2,1:). He is identified with Rudra (P. Br. 12,4,24:) and with Mṛtyu (J. Br. § 5: 112:). He receives the praise of the prastāva (J. Up. Br. 1,33,5:) and is lauded as being the vatsa of the Brahmins (J. Up. Br. 2,13,1:). Yet we glorify him because he looks after every one of us, if only we care for him (J. Up. Br. 2,14:). He is the sāman (J. Up. Br. 3,6,7:) and the abhipt (J. Up. Br. 3,20,1:) and so he is also called "world-conquering" lokapati and "food-eater" annāda. Elsewhere he is called "most voracious" J. Up. Br. 2,15: He is the mouth of the gāyatri (J. Up. Br. 4,8,2) and elsewhere devānām mukham (J. Up. Br. 4,11,5:). So he kept too his old capacity of "serving mankind" cf. J. Up. Br. 2,14,1: 2. Here we discover the high esteem one had also in those days for Agni. J. Up. Br. 2,14: gives all these reasons for the worship of Agni. Who serves Agni well in this world, Agni will serve him in yonder world. One should not touch him with hand or feet nor with a stick that means: do not wash yourself near a fire: do not stretch your feet towards a fire. Truly Agni makes such a person comfortable sadhūyām but 'caṇsam dadhāti. Agni is always at the service of mankind here and hereafter. Then J. Up. Br. 4,11,5: 6: let Agni tell us: aham aṁy anyāsām prajānām mukham. As he serves the devas, he also serves the human race.

3) Prajāpati really holds a special place in these Brāhmaṇas. Sometimes he gives the impression of being the Supreme Being. But this

(through a rite) cf. also P. Br. 23,12,2: 24,19,2: J. Up. Br. 1,11,8: says, that Prajāpati gave them the udgītha, therefore they are immortal. Udgītham devēbhyo 'mṛtam, tasmād te 'mṛtāḥ; cf. also J. Br. § 108 — through sacrifice — and § 143: ṛtena hi te tad aṁṛtam anuvindan. Yet, here no reference is made to rites or chants but it is ṛta, the power that governs the universe, that renders supranormal vitality to the devas. J. Up. Br. 1,18,10: says that the devas reached "immortality" with the help of the sacred syllable om.

h) Some of the devas are said to possess, or to have acquired supremacy over other devas or the Universe. So we meet Varuṇa, P. Br. 13,9,23: with the help of a sāman he attained paramouncy, P. Br. 15,3,30: by the devanthāna; cf. also J. Br. § 188.

Prajāpati is the supreme being and this is, as far as we are able to see, generally acknowledged throughout our sources; cf. P. Br. 16,4,1: 18,1,1: (implicitly in the context) 19,13,3: 22,18,4: and also J. Br. § 77: 161: 182: (implicitly in the context). Thus to Indra: P. Br. 16,4,3: 19,16,2: 22,8,2: 24,17,2: 25,1,9: 11,2: 3: cf. also J. Up. Br. 4,21,2: and J. Br. § 115: 139: 141: J. Up. Br. 1,9,2: om itindro vāg iti sarve devāḥ, tad etad indram eva sarve devā anuvanti. A few times Agni is mentioned as the supreme Lord; cf. P. Br. 25,11,2: 3: J. Up. Br. 3,6,7: sa śraṣṭhyāyā 'dhipatyāyā 'nnādyāya puroḥāyai jāyate. But J. Br. brings the devas back to the position of creatures J. Br. § 168 eṣā ha vai devānām rājñi yac chraddhā; saṁsā prātar upakramya tiṣṭhati; tāṁ devā upatiṣṭhante: yadricy eṣyati tadṛyañca eṣyāma iti; tasyai sarve devā anuvartmānaḥ sāyam juṣante; tāṁ āvīṣati sa juhōti, sa yajate; tad devā upajīvanti. "Die gläubige Gesinnung soll nicht von euch weichen. Die gläubige Gesinnung ist die Herrscherin der Götter. Morgens früh kommt sie heran: die Götter stellen sich ehrerbietig vor sie, denkend: "Nach welcher Richtung gewandt sie kommen wird, dahin gerichtet werden wir gehen. Ihr dienend genießen abends alle Götter. In diese tritt er ein, er giesst Spenden aus, er bringt Verehrung dar davon leben die Götter" (Caland, p. 227).

i) These devas are offered to.

P. Br. 1,6,4: iṣṭayajñas te deva soma, itutastomasya: "O divine soma to whom formulas and chants have been offered". So P. Br. 15,5,9: where Agni is praised: Agnim vai pūrvair abhīr ājuhōty and J. Br. § 6 says: subutam devān rādhyāniti ha prāśāmanā. The devas love the praises and offerings offered to them. Moreover sacrifice is a strengthening power for the devas; cf. J. Up. Br. 1,9,3: etena (the syllable om) vai samate parasye 'ndram vṛjīta: "by it and a simultaneous soma-offering one could force Indra away from his rival".

entirely foreign to the Indian mind. This as far as my own experience goes meeting people on my daily travels. But some signs of this disappreciation can be traced even in the Indian Literature. J. Masson⁸⁾ in his dissertation gives us some insight into the popular belief in deva-hood in early Buddhist times. Also as Buddhists they still believe in the existence of the devas (o.c. p. 12): "Le monde entier proclame bien haut qu'il y a des dieux" and afterwards on the same page the author says: "Those devas are neither omnipotent nor eternal nor even immutable. They are subject like other beings to transmigration" and p. 14: "Renaître dieu n'est donc qu'un pis-aller temporaire, offert à qui ne sait pas mieux". This shows the meaning of deva at that time. On p. 15 he continues: "L'ignorance des dieux, même les plus grands, va de pair avec leur impermanence; et les textes bouddhiques ne manquent pas de signaler cette autre déficience de leur perfection bienheureuse", and he continues: "Les dieux eux-mêmes sentent bien leur infériorité vis-à-vis du Bouddha, des Bouddhistes et du Bouddhisme". Sakka (or Indra) is the most popular deva, and he is looked upon as the chief of the 33 devas (tāvātimsa). Also to the Buddhists he is: "le furieux dieu du tonnerre et des batailles" (o.c. p. 46).

One meets two types of Sakkas: "le type plus ancien, de l'Indra, souverain-batailleur; le type, plus récent et un peu pâle du Sakka généreux". But this very Sakka worshipped by the Buddhists as well does not feel himself too supreme and too divine: "Alors vint au dieu Sakka qui lui demanda comment, en bref, un moine rendait l'hommage à Sakka". "Il répondit en effet brièvement, puis dit: 'Hommage de Sakka avant un simple disciple du Bienheureux'" (o.c. p. 10).

Something similar we come across in Ch. Up. 8,9,2; etc. where Indra with the devas comes to Prajāpati to become instructed. "Sakka still rules over the Tāvātimsa devaloka the lowest heaven but one, of the lower plane" cf. Malasekharā: Dictionary of Pāli proper names. London, 1938, p. 958: "He is more or less the primus inter pares, yet he surpasses his companions in ten things".

But even the qualities that could in themselves suggest something strictly divine, now only hint at just a bit more than human qualities: such as creation, forgiveness of sin, or supremacy is only acquired by the mere power of rites, sacrifices and chants.

The readiness to help ascribed to them, their protection etc. are all nearly forgotten. The devas are not any more the centre of pious thought but far more: Sacrifice and its parts. To these the devas lost their importance and the devas are really employed to prove the importance of those rites.

position, acquired in the Brāhmaṇa period, Prajāpati loses entirely in the Upaniṣads, although even there he is sometimes mentioned in his exalted place. We may summarize: Prajāpati distributes food and vigour to the gods P. Br. 6,4,1; he governs and helps the devas, who always resort to him for help. P. Br. 8,3,1: 12,13,4: 5: 27: 13,4,1: 19,19,1: 22,17,2: and also 18,1,4: cf. also J. Br. § 73: J. Up. Br. 1, 15, 2: 16,9: 49,1. He possesses supremacy P. Br. 19,13,3: 22,18,4.

Prajāpati has the right of casting a vote: tau prajāpatasv apṛcchetām cf. J. Br. § 17: 34: § 49: 182. Prajāpati supports his creatures (J. Br. § 59) evam ha vā eṣa prajāpatih samvatsarah prajān bibharti; cf. J. Up. Br. 1,11,3—8: Prajāpati feeds the animals, birds and devas, and in 1,12,1: etc. we hear the same mentioned of Gandharvas, Apsarases, the ancestors etc.; J. Br. § 8: even states that in the beginning Prajāpati was this (universe) Prajāpatir vāvedam agra āsīt, and this passage continues: mano ha vai prajāpatir devatā. Which Caland renders: "Die Gottheit Prajāpati ist ja der Geist". But continuing our reading we discover that Prajāpati created his creatures from his arm, breast, etc.

Conclusions.

Concluding our research on the concept of deva in the Brāhmaṇas we first of all see that the number of purely human epithets does not decrease, but increases. The suggestion of being thoroughly human becomes stronger and stronger. In RV. and AV. the devas perform the great deeds themselves. They have an immense power in their own beings, to kill and to revive. The Brāhmaṇas present the devas to us with less exalted and less august epithets. The great deeds they perform, are done practically, without any exception, by a certain magic knowledge of how to handle mighty powers. Or by a vision that comes from somewhere, wherein they see the rites and hymns and chants with which they will be able to act. Not the devas but the rites are the powerful ones, and I want to stress this "human" side of the devas as the Brāhmaṇas always clearly state that anyone "who knows this" or "who uses this rite" is able to do exactly the same and with the same results as the devas.

Concerning their "morals" we do not like to conclude that the devas are so august and sublime. They are far less lofty than we have known them to be in the earlier parts of this Vedic age. And even their chiefs such as Prajāpati committed sins that are regarded as very serious in the minds of the Indians: incest and murder. Nowadays the Indian tries to rationalize this old and low opinion of the devas by giving a mystical explanation and stating that Westerners cannot understand those topics and sometimes I heard also the reproach that we, Westerners, were the inventors of the bad sense, which was entirely foreign to the Indian mind. This as far as my own experience goes meeting people on my daily travels. But some signs of this disappreciation can be traced even in the Indian Literature. J. Masson⁹⁾ in his dissertation gives us some insight into the popular belief in deva-hood in early Buddhist times. Also as Buddhists they still believe in the existence of the devas (o.c. p. 12): "Le monde entier proclame bien haut qu'il y a des dieux" and afterwards on the same page the author says: "Those devas are neither omnipotent nor eternal nor even immutable. They are subject like other beings to transmigration" and p. 14: "Renaitre dieu n'est donc qu'un pis-aller temporaire, offert à qui ne sait pas mieux". This shows the meaning of deva at that time. On p. 15 he continues: "L'ignorance des dieux, même les plus grands, va de pair avec leur impermanence; et les textes bouddhiques ne manquent pas de signaler cette autre déficience de leur perfection bien-heureuse", and he continues: "Les dieux eux-mêmes sentent bien leur infériorité vis-à-vis du Bouddha, des Bouddhistes et du Bouddhisme". Sakka (or Indra) is the most popular deva, and he is looked upon as the chief of the 33 devas (tāvatisa). Also to the Buddhists he is: "le furieux dieu du tonnerre et des batailles" (o.c. p. 46).

One meets two types of Sakka: "le type plus ancien, de l'Indra, souverain-batailleur; le type, plus récent et un peu pâle du Sakka généreux". But this very Sakka worshipped by the Buddhists as well does not feel himself too supreme and too divine: "Alors vint au Bouddha le dieu Sakka, qui lui demanda comment, en bref, un moine peut devenir délivré. Et le Bouddha l'instruit en effet brièvement, puis le dieu remonte aux cieux" and a bit further: "Hommage de Sakka au Bouddha, faiblesses du dieu même devant un simple disciple du Bienheureux" (o.c. p. 48).

Something similar we come across in Ch. Up. 8,9,2: etc. where Indra with the devas comes to Prajāpati to become instructed. "Sakka still rules over the Tāvatisa devaloka the lowest heaven but one, of the lower plane" cf. Malasekhara: Dictionary of Pāli proper names, London, 1938, p. 958: "He is more or less the primus inter pares, yet he surpasses his companions in ten things".

But even the qualities that could in themselves suggest something strictly divine, now only hint at just a bit more than human qualities: such as creation, forgiveness of sin, or supremacy is only acquired by the mere power of rites, sacrifices and chants.

The readiness to help ascribed to them, their protection etc. are all nearly forgotten. The devas are not any more the centre of pious thought but far more: Sacrifice and its parts. To these the devas lost their importance and the devas are really employed to prove the importance of those rites.

position, acquired in the Brāhmaṇa period, Prajāpati loses entirely in the Upaniṣads, although even there he is sometimes mentioned in his exalted place. We may summarize: Prajāpati distributes food and vigour to the gods P. Br. 6,4,1; he governs and helps the devas, who always resort to him for help. P. Br. 8,3,1: 12,13,4: 5: 27: 13,4,1: 19,19,1: 22,17,2: and also 18,1,4: cf. also J. Br. § 73: J. Up. Br. 1, 15, 2: 16,9: 49,1. He possesses supremacy P. Br. 19,13,3: 22,18,4.

Prajāpati has the right of casting a vote: taṁ prajāpatav aprcchetām cf. J. Br. § 17: 34: § 49: 182. Prajāpati supports his creatures (J. Br. § 59) evam ha vā eṣa prajāpatih samvatsarah prajān bibharti; cf. J. Up. Br. 1,11,3—8: Prajāpati feeds the animals, birds and devas, and in 1,12,1: etc. we hear the same mentioned of Gandharvas, Apsaras, the ancestors etc.; J. Br. § 8: even states that in the beginning Prajāpati was this (universe) Prajāpatir vāvedam agra āsit, and this passage continues: mano ha vai prajāpatir devatā. Which Caland renders: "Die Gottheit Prajāpati ist ja der Geist". But continuing our reading we discover that Prajāpati created his creatures from his arm, breast, etc.

Conclusions.

Concluding our research on the concept of deva in the Brāhmaṇas we first of all see that the number of purely human epithets does not decrease, but increases. The suggestion of being thoroughly human becomes stronger and stronger. In RV. and AV. the devas perform the great deeds themselves. They have an immense power in their own beings, to kill and to revive. The Brāhmaṇas present the devas to us with less exalted and less august epithets. The great deeds they perform, are done practically, without any exception, by a certain magic knowledge of how to handle mighty powers. Or by a vision that comes from somewhere, wherein they see the rites and hymns and chants with which they will be able to act. Not the devas but the rites are the powerful ones, and I want to stress this "human" side of the devas as the Brāhmaṇas always clearly state that anyone "who knows this" or "who uses this rite" is able to do exactly the same and with the same results as the devas.

Concerning their "morals" we do not like to conclude that the devas are so august and sublime. They are far less lofty than we have known them to be in the earlier parts of this Vedic age. And even their chiefs such as Prajāpati committed sins that are regarded as very serious in the minds of the Indians: incest and murder. Nowadays the Indian tries to rationalize this old and low opinion of the devas by giving a mystical explanation and stating that Westerners cannot understand those topics and sometimes I heard also the reproach that we, Westerners, were the inventors of the bad sense, which was weakness but does not prove foolishness. Where the author states (o.c. p. 177): "all is now symbolical and the gods, though in general they are the gods of RV., are not the same as of old. The priests have become gods. The old appellation of "spirit" asura is confined to evil spirits", I only can agree as long as "gods" means superhuman and powerful beings, in any higher and especially moral meaning, I do not agree.

In the introduction to the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa the same author *) says: "More interesting is the relation between the gods and demons. The chief difference between these is that the demons represent darkness and the gods light, the demons evil, the gods good." As a whole we may agree, but this difference is not everywhere discernable. More often we receive the impression that they are just each others' opponents and as Hopkins states o.c. p. 37: "There is some historical feeling in the statement that the gods were younger than the demons, that they were the children of the previous hierarchy".

the help of the father-god cf. P. Br. 8,3,1: "I am at a loss to understand why he translates here devas with "gods" and asuras with "demons". Sometimes a reader might conclude that the devas are truly nasty towards the asuras and that they are always out to rob and hurt them. Farquhar in his Outline Religious Lit., p. 31 f. comes to the conclusion: "The priests and the sacrifice were now supreme and omnipotent, and in consequence the religion had become pitifully degraded. The sacrifice was conceived as a magic system, irresistibly wielding all powers in earth and heaven and the priests who held the system in their hands were regarded as gods on earth. Hence, though the gods nominally retain their old place, they have become of very little account, stripped of nearly all their real power by priests and sacrifice."

It is true, but where we read about sacrifice and rites and chants, we do not hear much of priests and priesthood. There is one exception when Bṛhaspati is said to strive earnestly for the task of purohita, and where we read that some devas take up the duty of an udgātar. In my research I did not come across the deva-hood of the Brahmins. Yet, elsewhere, e.g. in the Mahābhārata we notice the other opinion when Jaratkāru answers his wife: "the sun would not set if I had not performed the sandhyā rite".

Oldenberg *) concludes his introduction in the same way: "Das priesterliche Selbstbewusstsein aber, das aus den Brāhmaṇatexten spricht, lebt es nicht in unterwürfiger Demut aus der Hand eines Höheren zu empfangen" (p. 14) and on the next page he continues: "Da kann denn den Indra und Varuṇa nur der Schatten ihrer einstigen

Opinions of the Authorities.

In his Indian Mythology A. A. Macdonell concludes, that the devas are conceived in this Brāhmaṇa epoch as having more universal power than in the Vedic period; o.c. p. 73. To my regret I cannot agree. If the author wanted to state that only a few devas are mentioned by name and that these few are acting all the time, I agree. But their universal power is not so much their own power as well the powers concealed in the magic rites and chants of the sacrifices. About Prajāpati the same author says: "that he is a creation not so much of popular mythology as of priestly speculation and the result of this fact — as was inevitable — was that his permanence as a great god was not assured".

It may be that the Brahmins could not find enough material in their own minds to equip this image of Prajāpati with. Because of his name only he could have grown to the highest and supreme being if only they had had a clear conception of the idea concerned, viz. the creator. In this case they might have succeeded.

Macdonell too, sees the change of attitude between devas and asuras. If those terms were before epithets of the same group of beings, now they have separated and turned each other's enemies. Nevertheless one does not receive a clear notion from him of the devas nor of the asuras, nor of the important problem of the historical or religious background of the struggle between devas and asuras. He states: "In the phenomenon coupled with the fact that the Iranians treated dæva — the word corresponding to the Vedic deva "god" — as meaning "devil", it is natural to see a result of hostile relations between the Iranian reformed faith of Zoroaster and the older Vedic belief". However, I believe that another question remains to be solved: namely whether in these early ages there was such an intense cultural interchange between Iran and India, and why the same happened in India as in Iran but with entirely different outcome.

E. W. Hopkins in Religion of India, p. 267, says: "The gods of old are accepted by the orthodox as a matter of course, although theoretically they are born of the All god, who is without the need of ceremonial rites". I should like to express a doubt: the devas are said to be born from Prajāpati- but he needs offerings and rites and even tapas to perform his great deeds. Why does the author use the word: "all god" and what does he suggest that it might mean?

O.c. p. 195: "The tales of gods for the most part are foolish. But they show well what conception the priests had of their divinities". I for one am doubtful about the term "foolish". The devas might often be in great need of help from "on high". That shows weakness but does not prove foolishness. Where the author states (o.c. p. 177): "all is now symbolical and the gods, though in general they are the gods of the Vedas, are now the gods of all the religions of the world" (p. 177) we must not agree.

In the introduction to the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa the same author *) says: "More interesting is the relation between the gods and demons. The chief difference between these is that the demons represent darkness and the gods light, the demons evil, the gods good." As a whole we may agree, but this difference is not everywhere discernable. More often we receive the impression that they are just each others' opponents and as Hopkins states o.c. p. 37: "There is some historical feeling in the statement that the gods were younger brothers of the demons (both being children of the creator: historically a damaging addition) and that the demons were stronger, did sometimes prevail and would often have prevailed, had it not been for the help of the father-god cf. P. Br. 8,3,1." I am at a loss to understand why he translates here devas with "gods" and asuras with "demons". Sometimes a reader might conclude that the devas are truly nasty towards the asuras and that they are always out to rob and hurt them. Farquhar in his Outline Religious Lit., p. 31 f. comes to the conclusion: "The priests and the sacrifice were now supreme and omnipotent, and in consequence the religion had become pitifully degraded. The sacrifice was conceived as a magic system, irresistibly wielding all powers in earth and heaven and the priests who held the system in their hands were regarded as gods on earth. Hence, though the gods nominally retain their old place, they have become of very little account, stripped of nearly all their real power by priests and sacrifice."

It is true, but where we read about sacrifice and rites and chants, we do not hear much of priests and priesthood. There is one exception when Bṛhaspati is said to strive earnestly for the task of purohita, and where we read that some devas take up the duty of an udgātā to sing the śaṁṣā (cf. Śaṁṣā p. 10). But elsewhere we find that the devas are not set if I had not performed the śaṁṣā rite".

Oldenberg *) concludes his introduction in the same way: "Das priestertliche Selbstbewusstsein aber, das aus den Brāhmaṇatexten spricht, lebt er nicht in unterwürfiger Demut aus der Hand eines Hohen zu empfangen" (p. 14) and on the next page he continues: "Da kann denn den Indra und Varuṇa nur der Schatten ihrer einstigen

Opinions of the Authorities.

In his Indian Mythology A. A. Macdonell concludes, that the devas are conceived in this Brāhmaṇa epoch as having more universal power than in the Vedic period; o.c. p. 73. To my regret I cannot agree. If the author wanted to state that only a few devas are mentioned by name and that these few are acting all the time, I agree. But their universal power is not so much their own power as well the powers concealed in the magic rites and chants of the sacrifices. About Prajāpati the same author says: "that he is a creation not so much of popular mythology as of priestly speculation and the result of this fact — as was inevitable — was that his permanence as a great god was not assured".

It may be that the Brahmins could not find enough material in their own minds to equip this image of Prajāpati with. Because of his name only he could have grown to the highest and supreme being if only they had had a clear conception of the idea concerned, viz. the creator. In this case they might have succeeded.

Macdonell too, sees the change of attitude between devas and asuras. If those terms were before epithets of the same group of beings, now they have separated and turned each other's enemies. Nevertheless one does not receive a clear notion from him of the devas nor of the asuras, nor of the important problem of the historical or religious background of the struggle between devas and asuras. He states: "In the phenomenon coupled with the fact that the Iranians treated daeva — the word corresponding to the Vedic deva "god" — as meaning "devil", it is natural to see a result of hostile relations between the Iranian reformed faith of Zoroaster and the older Vedic belief". However, I believe that another question remains to be solved: namely whether in these early ages there was such an intense cultural interchange between Iran and India, and why the same happened in India as in Iran but with entirely different outcome.

E. W. Hopkins in Religion of India, p. 267, says: "The gods of old are accepted by the orthodox as a matter of course, although theoretically they are born of the All god, who is without the need of ceremonial rites". I should like to express a doubt: the devas are said to be born from Prajāpati: but he needs offerings and rites and even tapas to perform his great deeds. Why does the author use the word: "all god" and what does he suggest that it might mean?

O.c. p. 195: "The tales of gods for the most part are foolish. But they show well what conception the priests had of their divinities". I for one am doubtful about the term: "foolish". The devas might often be in great need of help from "on high". That shows weakness but does not prove foolishness. Where the author states (o.c. p. 177): "all is now symbolical and the gods, though in general they are the gods of RV., are not the same as of old. The priests have become gods. The old appellation of "spirit" asura is confined to evil spirits", I only can agree as long as "gods" means superhuman and powerful beings, in any higher and especially moral meaning, I do not agree.

In the introduction to the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa the same author *) says: "More interesting is the relation between the gods and demons. The chief difference between these is that the demons represent darkness and the gods light, the demons evil, the gods good." As a whole we may agree, but this difference is not everywhere discernable. More often we receive the impression that they are just each others' opponents and as Hopkins states o.c. p. 37: "There is some historical feeling in the statement that the gods were younger brothers of the demons (both being children of the creator: historically a damaging addition) and that the demons were stronger, did sometimes prevail and would often have prevailed, had it not been for the help of the father-god cf. P. Br. 8,3,1: "I am at a loss to understand why he translates here devas with "gods" and asuras with "demons". Sometimes a reader might conclude that the devas are truly nasty towards the asuras and that they are always out to rob and hurt them. Farquhar in his Outline Religious Lit., p. 31 f. comes to the conclusion: "The priests and the sacrifice were now supreme and omnipotent, and in consequence the religion had become pitifully degraded. The sacrifice was conceived as a magic system, irresistibly wielding all powers in earth and heaven and the priests who held the system in their hands were regarded as gods on earth. Hence, though the gods nominally retain their old place, they have become of very little account, stripped of nearly all their real power by priests and sacrifice."

It is true, but where we read about sacrifice and rites and chants, we do not hear much of priests and priesthood. There is one exception when Bṛhaspati is said to strive earnestly for the task of purohita, and where we read that some devas take up the duty of an adgātar. In my research I did not come across the deva-hood of the Brahmins. Yet, elsewhere, e.g. in the Mahābhāṣya we notice the other opinion when Jāṣkara answers his wife: "the sun would not set if I had not performed the sandhyā rite".

O. Jensen, *) concludes his introduction in the same way: "Das fördert die Selbstbewusstseins aber, das aus den Brāhmaṇatexten etc. etc. lebt es nicht in unterwürfiger Demut aus der Hand eines H. Vren zu empfangen" (p. 14) and on the next page he continues: "Da kann denn den Indra und Varuṇa nur der Schatten ihres einstigen

Opinions of the Authorities.

In his Indian Mythology A. A. Macdonell concludes, that the devas are conceived in this Brāhmaṇa epoch as having more universal power than in the Vedic period; o.c. p. 73. To my regret I cannot agree. If the author wanted to state that only a few devas are mentioned by name and that these few are acting all the time, I agree. But their universal power is not so much their own power as well the powers concealed in the magic rites and chants of the sacrifices. About Prajāpati the same author says: "that he is a creation not so much of popular mythology as of priestly speculation and the result of this fact — as was inevitable — was that his permanence as a great god was not assured".

It may be that the Brahmins could not find enough material in their own minds to equip this image of Prajāpati with. Because of his name only he could have grown to the highest and supreme being if only they had had a clear conception of the idea concerned, viz. the creator. In this case they might have succeeded.

Macdonell too, sees the change of attitude between devas and asuras. If those terms were before epithets of the same group of beings, now they have separated and turned each other's enemies. Nevertheless one does not receive a clear notion from him of the devas nor of the asuras, nor of the important problem of the historical or religious background of the struggle between devas and asuras. He states: "In the phenomenon coupled with the fact that the Iranians treated daeva — the word corresponding to the Vedic deva "god" — as meaning "devil", it is natural to see a result of hostile relations between the Iranian reformed faith of Zoroaster and the older Vedic belief". However, I believe that another question remains to be solved: namely whether in these early ages there was such an intense cultural interchange between Iran and India, and why the same happened in India as in Iran but with entirely different outcome.

E. W. Hopkins in Religion of India, p. 267, says: "The gods of old are accepted by the orthodox as a matter of course, although theoretically they are born of the All god, who is without the need of ceremonial rites". I should like to express a doubt: the devas are said to be born from Prajāpati: but he needs offerings and rites and even tapas to perform his great deeds. Why does the author use the word: "all god" and what does he suggest that it might mean?

O.c. p. 195: "The tales of gods for the most part are foolish. But they show well what conception the priests had of their divinities". I for one am doubtful about the term: "foolish". The devas might often be in great need of help from "on high". That shows

EXAMINATION OF THE CHANDOGYA AND BRHAD-ARANYAKA UPANISHADS

Coming to the last part of our research we must begin by stating the fact that the term deva does not occur as often as is expected. Though it might be partly dependent on the nature of these books, one really is under the impression that the devas are in decline in the respect and cultus of the faithful. Moreover this very respect, mixed with fear, is fading away. In this "free thinker's research" as the Upanishads are, there is practically no mentioning of cultus of the devas, except a little bit hidden away in the term: āpāse "you meditate upon" e.g. Ch. Up. 4,2,2:.

1. To begin with it seems that the younger Vedic times saw or liked to see Prajāpati as the father or origin of the devas and asuras cf. Ch. Up. 1,2,1: and BAU. 1,3,1: 5,2,1: 5,1:1. So in BAU. 1,3,1: the devas are called kāniyasāh: "the younger brothers", and the asuras the pyāyasāh, "the elder ones". So here we discover a tendency to standardize Asura and Deva as brothers, yet everywhere it is said that there is a feud between them. Prajāpati is often called pitar cf. Ch. Up. 5,1,7: and even his name points in that same direction: "Lord of offspring", though in this text no devas or asuras call him father, but the grāhas. But the very same Prajāpati seems to be raised to the rank of Highest Being in BAU. 1,5,20: yathaiṣā devatā, evaṃ sa yathasāṃ devasāṃ sarvāṇi bhūtāny avanti, evaṃ brahmaṇasāṃ sarvāṇi bhūtāny avanti). Senart translates: "Telle est cette divinité (Prajāpati) tel il est. Comme tous les êtres servent cette divinité, tous servent celui qui sait ainsi." We find another hint of Prajāpati's highest place among the devas in BAU. 4,3,33: where the Prajāpati-loka ranks among the highest "heavens" except that of brahma. Here we already notice that Prajāpati is slowly put aside by the concept of Brahman, as Brahman's loka is said to be equal to a hundred times the happiness of Prajāpati's world.

But in BAU. 5,5,1: we are taught that the beginning and origin of everything were "the waters": āpa evadāṃ agra āsih. And out of those waters "developed" (anjanita) the satyam: "reality or truth" and satyam let evolve brahma from itself. And out of brahma Grösze bleiben. Auch in Indien sind es die Priester, die den Göttern die Lebenskraft verkümmert haben”.

Or is it possible that the concept of deva contained far less than we like to admit, so that the poor content could not satisfy the educated priests anymore or the unsophisticated people? Just this gradual degradation in value of the deva concept makes me doubtful that deva should have been the Indian concept of God in the strict sense. I believe, this implicitly points out that the Indian mind, also of this age, might have had a feeling for something higher. A number of passages do so implicitly and some other texts do the same explicitly. But this higher being certainly had not found a definite place in liturgy but possibly in the hearts and the minds of the people with common sense.

among them. To say the least it hints at an identity in some aspect, compare for instance Ch. Up. 7,6,1; 7,1; 8,1; 10,1. The very same we might discover in BAU. 1,4,10: where devas, ṛṣis and manuṣyāḥ equally awakened about the same object. So the great ṛṣi Vāmadeva may be held to have said: aḥam brahmāsmi sa idaṃ sarvaṃ bhavati, "I am brahmā and he became this universe" and he continues in Senart's translation "): "et les dieux mêmes ne peuvent l'en empêcher; car il est leur arman." ṛṣya ha na devāḥ ca nābhūtyā ṛṣate, ātmā hy eṣaṃ sa bhavati. The text continues: atha yo 'nyāṃ devatāṃ apāṣte: anyo 'tan, anyo 'haṃ asmi, na sa veda. "He that may think that this is a godhead, and I am another (or: something else) he has not any knowledge." BAU. 1,5,6: presents to us: devās, pitaro manuṣyāḥ just showing that as word, mind, and senses are related, so devas, pitara and mankind as well.

The same passage verse 16 relates that there are three worlds: manuṣya-lokaḥ, pitṛlokaḥ and deva-lokaḥ. Nobody will suggest that men and his ancestors belong to a different order. So what about the devas? One might believe that no very great difference between them was assumed by the authors of the earliest Upaniṣads. BAU. 4,4,4: brings us the very same idea home: tad yaithā peśakārī peśato mātṛām apādāya: here we clearly see a craftsman forming from clay or other pliable material a new body for the same ātman. I do not like to translate ātman here, as it immediately implies a certain opinion that might be entirely false as to the text under discussion however rightly rendered in other passages. And the text goes on: anyan navataram kalyāṇataram rūpaṃ kurute . . . pitṛyaṃ vā gāndharvaṃ vā devaṃ vā prajāpatiṃ vā brahmaṃ vāṇyeṣāṃ vā bhūtānām. This craftsman "makes a new and more handsome shape: may be that of an ancestor, a gandharva, a deva, a prajāpati, a brahma, or any other kind of being." This text seems to imply that the difference in every sort of existence is just a matter of body and shape. But the ātman (would "élan vital" do, or "persoonlijkheidskern" or "soul"?) is the same in every being. So to say: the essence in each being is identical, the difference comes from the nāmarūpa: "name and shape" ?) Max Müller speaking about several RV. texts e.g. 10,90,4: 1,164,41-42: and 3,38: concludes: "from the collation of these texts it appears that the existence of nāmarūpa is due to two consecutive acts of division first: the separation of the two aspects of the universal Br: 1. then the dismemberment of its two-in-one cosmic manifestation" (o.c. p. 4).

The prājāpatis are his (ātman) functional names ṛṣyatātāni karma-kāṇḍinī (cf. BAU. 1,4,7: and our author p. 16), his true name is ātman. Where St. Thomas Aquinas defines individuum as materia evolves Prajāpati. Then there is written: Prajāpatir (asṛjata) devān "he created the devas or evolved them". I do not think that it is good to render sṛj- with "create", at least not in the strict sense, to make something ex nihilo or sine praejacente materia. A special research on the true contents of the term sṛj- is necessary. What S. Radhakrishnan²⁾ wrote would barely suffice and does not seem to give us firm proof about the ideas of the Indians of the RV., but more of the opinions of the author. So let us propose sṛj- as "to produce" or "to be the cause of something, to create by emanation or development". And immediately we can read in BAU. 5,5,1: Te devāḥ satyam evopāsate "les dieux ne connaissaient que le réel". I do not see the value of eva in this quotation. Do they mean to say: the devas did not know anything about Prajāpati, brahma or the waters or, and this is quite possible too: did the devas acknowledge satyam only as their principium quo, as the most important of all?

I do not want to go into the details of how Vedic scientists thought that the waters emanated satyam, satyam brahman and brahman Prajāpati. Nor how we are to regard them, as persons or as absolutely impersonal beings. This question rises: is Brahman in the text to be regarded as brahmā or brahman? Even then it does not mean much, since we are apt to call God also Godhead and Divinity. And as we do not distinguish between this personal and impersonal expression, just the same might have happened to the Vedic primitive philosophers, who had to start developing a fixed and acceptable terminology.

2. Sometimes the use of the term deva does not tell us anything, e.g. when it is a vocative, and in cases like BAU. 6,3,1: yāvanto devās tvayi jātavedaḥ, tiryāṇico ghmanti puruṣasya kāmān as "killing the desires in a person" need not be a true act of a deva or of a human being. It might be asserted of so many things and beings.

Ch. Up. 1,12,5: presents to us Varuna with the title deva; and it tells us annam āharat "he brings us food". BAU. 1,3,9: produces Mṛtyu, who unmistakably is death as devatā dūr nāma. Every one agrees on the unpleasantness of death and I do not see any reason to renounce or acknowledge anything special in a deeper meaning of devatā as concerning Mṛtyu.

3. We have already stated the fact that in RV. there was not always an essential difference between devas and human beings. The very same we have to face here. After having said in Ch. Up. 7,10,1: that "the waters have taken on several shapes" the text goes on stating which forms, i.e. earth, atmosphere, sky and mountains. Then, yad devamanuṣyāḥ. Here the text joins deva and men together in a dvandva-compound, which hides from us any essential difference and Hume in his 13 Principal Upanisads translates: "This is the Rājana sāmān as woven upon the divinities".

The same method of putting devas on a par with material things, thought of to have great influence, we find in Ch. Up. 4,17,2: where Agni and ṛc, Vāyu and Yajus, Aditya and sāmān are identified. Ch. Up. 4,17,8: relates to us lokaḥ, devas and vedas mentioned in the same phrase, whose power overcomes the mistakes in any sacrifice.

Ch. Up. 7,1,2: relates to us the conversation between a certain Nārada and Sanatkumāra. Sanatkumāra replies, giving account of all the knowledge he has gathered. And among all these he mentions: śarpa-deva-jana-vidyām "knowledge of serpents, of devas and men". The same occurs in 7,2,1: but there the author mentions — as he tells us — that vāk "speech" teaches us all possible knowledge: divyaṃ ca pṛthivyaṃ cāyumeṇa, ākāśamekāpaśca tejaśca devāṃśca manuṣyāṃśca paśūṃśca. Exactly the same thing happens over and over again; cf. BAU. 2,1,20: prāṇāḥ, lokāḥ, devāḥ, bhūtāni; cf. also BAU. 2,5,15.

In BAU. 4,3: the author comes to speak on the state of sleep and dream and dreamless sleep. And he states inter alia that when asleep you believe to be a deva, a rāja: deva iva, rājeva. Aham evedam, sarvo 'māni manyate, so 'sya paramo lokah. "I am the universe, I am this all "he believes" and this is for him the highest heaven". Deva, rāja, universe, all mentioned on the same level. If here a tremendous difference is seen, no one really dreams of such a thing as being God.

In the same adhyāya and brāhmaṇa § 22 the author explains that absorbed in ātman — a father becomes a no-father, a mother a no-mother, lokāḥ alokāḥ, devā adevāḥ, vedā avedāḥ. He only puts deva between other beings and things. It certainly is of greater importance than fathers and mothers, but is still among worlds and vedas. BAU. 6,2,2: mentions the two roads of mortal beings: the road of ancestors and the road of the devas. dve vai śiṣṭavām piṇḍāni ahary devānām ata martyānām. The opposition is not between devānām, and martyānām, but between śiṣṭām and devānām.

One could be in doubt whether the Indians believed in identifications as mentioned above. Did they see the devas as godlike beings, then we cannot help seeing Vedic man as stupid and primitive as identifying pure man-made things with divinity. But as our research on R.V. and AV. seems to show that deva is a superhuman power, but surely not divine, there can be no difficulty in accepting the views expressed above.

Ch. Up. suggests clearly that ṛc, sāmān, and udgītha are beings, personal or impersonal, with greater powers and vaster influences than the devas, cf. Ch. Up. 1,6,8: "he who sings these songs (ṛc etc.), he has command over worlds that are far away, even farther away quantitate signata (De ente et essentia c. 2) there the Upanisads practically define speaking individuum: ātman qualified by nāmarūpa. Maryla Falk again: "knowledge of names is in fact knowledge of things, for according to the ancient Indian conception, names are no fortuitous designations, but are expressive of the innermost essence and power of the things named" (o.c. p. 16). While the name is the inner power of the individual being or thing, the rūpa is its physical appearance (o.c. p. 19) and the rūpa — the physical organism — is built up by the prāṇa which in its own essence remains "shapeless". But the authoress continues: "Reduced to its shapeless aspect of prāṇa, rūpa is no more actually different from the invisible nāma, as their separation depends only upon the physical manifestation of rūpa" (o.c. p. 20).

Accordingly, it seems to be obvious that the only difference between mand and deva is his nāmarūpa, and rūpa in its non-physical form is identical with nāma, and this is confirmed by the road to union with Brahman. There is no difference between deva and man. "Thus by knowledge one can reduce the variety of being, reconduct it to the primitive stage before the rūpas were mingled, that is to say, before the differentiation of name and form" (o.c. p. 25).

4. We come across this same way of thinking, of putting devas and humans on the same level, also in other places. So we meet the devas put on the same footing as ṛc and ṛṣi. The deva may be something of very great influence and of great importance. Relating to Ch. Up. 1,3,9: they give us support and help.

Ch. Up. 1,10,9—11: imply that the prastāva, udgītha and pratibhāra have in them — or are themselves "divinities". Especially as already in Ch. Up. 1,2,1: the devas conquered the udgītham by which they could overcome the asuras. And Ch. Up. 1,11,4: gives almost the same idea except that the deva who resides in or is in the ṛc, is prāṇa (5:) and in the Udgītha is āditya (in Senart's translation rendered as: "soleil"). Yet in pratibhāra is annam "food". So here we even have to believe that the author does not like us to see any difference between deva and breath, deva and sunshine, deva and food. In short, that deva is something like a vital need. About the same in power as the mighty ṛc and ṛṣi.

Ch. Up. 2,20,1: places Agni, Vāyu, Aditya on a level with a sound, prastāva and udgītha: no talk about residing in or presiding over, but just Agnir bhīkārāḥ.

Cp. Up. 1,13,2: equalized several devas e.g. Vāyu, Candramās, Agni, Aditya, viśve devāḥ, Prajāpati with several other sounds. Ch. Up. 2,20,1: makes the remark: etad rājanam devatāsu protam. Which Senart renders as: "C'est le (sāman) Rājana réalisé dans les divinités" and Hume in his 13 Principal Upanisads translates: "This is the Rājana sāmān as woven upon the divinities".

The same method of putting devas on a par with material things, thought of to have great influence, we find in Ch. Up. 4,17,2: where Agni and ṛc, Vāyu and Yajus, Aditya and sāmān are identified. Ch. Up. 4,17,8: relates to us lokas, devas and vedas mentioned in the same phrase, whose power overcomes the mistakes in any sacrifice.

Ch. Up. 7,1,2: relates to us the conversation between a certain Nārada and Sanatkumāra. Sanatkumāra replies, giving account of all the knowledge he has gathered. And among all these he mentions: śarpa-deva-jana-vidyām "knowledge of serpents, of devas and men". The same occurs in 7,2,1: but there the author mentions — as he tells us — that vāk "speech" teaches us all possible knowledge: divyaṃca pṛthivīṃca vāyurṃca, ākāśamekāpaṇca tejaśca devāṃśca manuṣyāṃśca pśūṃśca. Exactly the same thing happens over and over again; cf. BAU. 2,1,20: prāṇāḥ, lokāḥ, devāḥ, bhūtāni; cf. also BAU. 2,5,15.

In BAU. 4,3: the author comes to speak on the state of sleep and dream and dreamless sleep. And he states inter alia that when asleep you believe to be a deva, a rāja: deva iva, rājeva. Aham evedam, sarvo 'mīti manyate, so 'sya paramo lokah. "I am the universe, I am this all "he believes" and this is for him the highest heaven". Deva, rājā, universe, all mentioned on the same level. If here a tremendous difference is seen, no one really dreams of such a thing as being God.

In the same adhyāya and brāhmaṇa § 22 the author explains that absorbed in āśman — a father becomes a no-father, a mother a no-mother, lokāḥ alokāḥ, devā adevāḥ, vedā avedāḥ. He only puts deva between other beings and things. It certainly is of greater importance than fathers and mothers, but is still among worlds and vedas. BAU.

... of mortal beings: the road of ancestors
... devānām
... māṛtyānam, but between pitrṇām and devānām.

One could be in doubt whether the Indians believed in identification. And they see the devas as godlike beings, then as identifying pure man-made things. Ch. on RV. and AV. seems to show that deva is a superhuman being, but surely not divine, there can be no difficulty in accepting the views expressed above.

Ch. Up. suggests clearly that ṛc, sāmān, and udgātha are beings, personal or impersonal, with greater powers and vaster influences than the devas; cf. Ch. Up. 1,6,8: "he who sings these songs (ṛc etc.), he has command over worlds that are far away, even farther away quantitate signata (De ente et essentia c. 2) there the Upaniṣads practically define speaking individuum: ātman qualified by nāmarūpa. Maryla Falk again: "knowledge of names is in fact knowledge of things, for according to the ancient Indian conception, names are no fortuitous designations, but are expressive of the innermost essence and power of the things named" (o.c. p. 16). While the name is the inner power of the individual being or thing, the rūpa is its physical appearance (o.c. p. 19) and the rūpa — the physical organism — is built up by the prāṇa which in its own essence remains "shapeless". But the authoress continues: "Reduced to its shapeless aspect of prāṇa, rūpa is no more actually different from the invisible nāma, and their separation depends only upon the physical manifestation of rūpa" (o.c. p. 20).

Accordingly, it seems to be obvious that the only difference between mand and deva is his nāmarūpa, and rūpa in its non-physical form is identical with nāma, and this is confirmed by the road to union with Brahman. There is no difference between deva and man. "Thus by knowledge one can reduce the variety of being, reconduct it to the primitive stage before the rūpas were mingled, that is to say, before the differentiation of name and form" (o.c. p. 25).

4. We come across this same way of thinking, of putting devas and humans on the same level, also in other places. So we meet the devas put on the same footing as ṛc and ṛṣi. The deva may be something of very great influence and of great importance. Relating to Ch. Up. 1,3,9: they give us support and help.

Ch. Up. 1,10,9—11: imply that the prastāva, udgītha and pratihāra have in them — or are themselves "divinities". Especially as already in Ch. Up. 1,2,1: the devas conquered the udgītham by which they could overcome the asuras. And Ch. Up. 1,11,4: gives almost the same idea except that the deva who resides in or is in the ṛc, is prāṇa (5:) and in the Udgītha is āditya (in Senart's translation rendered as: "soleil"). Yet in pratihāra is annam "food". So here we even have to believe that the author does not like us to see any difference between deva and breath, deva and sunshine, deva and food. In short, that deva is something like a vital need. About the same in power as the mighty ṛc and ṛṣi.

Ch. Up. 2,20,1: places Agni, Vāyu, Aditya on a level with a sound, prastāva and udgītha: no talk about residing in or presiding over, but just Agnir hīnkārah.

Cp. Up. 1,13,2: equalized several devas e.g. Vāyu, Candramās, Agni, Aditya, viṣve devāḥ, Prajāpati with several other sounds. Ch. Up. 2,20,1: makes the remark: etad rājanam devatām protam. Which Senart renders as: "C'est le (sāman) Rājana réalisé dans les divinités" and Hume in his 13 Principal Upanisads translates: "This is the Rājana sāmān as woven upon the divinities".

The same method of putting devas on a par with material things, thought of to have great influence, we find in Ch. Up. 4,17,2: where Agni and ṛc, Vāyu and Yajus, Aditya and sāmān are identified. Ch. Up. 4,17,8: relates to us lokas, devas and vedas mentioned in the same phrase, whose power overcomes the mistakes in any sacrifice.

Ch. Up. 7,1,2: relates to us the conversation between a certain Nārada and Sanatkumāra. Sanatkumāra replies, giving account of all the knowledge he has gathered. And among all these he mentions: sarpa-deva-jana-vidyām "knowledge of serpents, of devas and men". The same occurs in 7,2,1: but there the author mentions — as he tells us — that vāk "speech" teaches us all possible knowledge: divyaṃca pṛthivīṃca vāyumaṃca, ākāśmaṃcāpaśca tejaśca devāmaṃca manuṣyāmaṃca paśūmaṃca. Exactly the same thing happens over and over again; cf. BAU. 2,1,20: prāṇāḥ, lokāḥ, devāḥ, bhūtāni; cf. also BAU. 2,5,15:.

In BAU. 4,3: the author comes to speak on the state of sleep and dream and dreamless sleep. And he states inter alia that when asleep you believe to be a deva, a rāja: deva iva, rājeva. Aham evedam, sarvo 'smṛti manyate, so 'sya paramo lokah. "I am the universe, I am this all "he believes" and this is for him the highest heaven". Deva, rājā, universe, all mentioned on the same level. If here a tremendous difference is seen, no one really dreams of such a thing as being God.

In the same adhyāya and brāhmaṇa § 22 the author explains that absorbed in ātman — a father becomes a no-father, a mother a no-mother, lokāḥ alokāḥ, devā adevāḥ, vedā aavedāḥ. He only puts deva between other beings and things. It certainly is of greater importance than fathers and mothers, but is still among worlds and vedas. BAU. 6,2,2: mentions the two roads of mortal beings: the road of ancestors and the road of the devas. dve sṛṣṭi aśṛṇatvaṃ pitṛṇāṃ aham devānāṃ uta marīyānāṃ. The opposition is not between devānāṃ, and marīyānāṃ, but between pitṛṇāṃ and devānāṃ.

... L. in doubt whether the Indians believed in identification of devas as godlike beings, then pure man-made thing. ...
... as devas

AV. seems to show that deva is a supernatural being. If deva is divine, there can be no difficulty in accepting the views expressed above.

Ch. Up. suggests clearly that ṛc, sāmān, and udgītha are beings, personal or impersonal, with greater powers and vaster influences than the devas; cf. Ch. Up. 3,6,8: "he who sings these songs (ṛc etc.), he has command over worlds that are far away, even farther away than the sun, and also of the desires of the devas"; and 1,7,6: tells us the same about men, but the next paragraph continues: "that such a person even conquers this world and everything devas may desire". Will this exaggeration tell us that the ṛc, sāman and udgītha have a great importance in Oriental hyperbolic wording? Or are we to believe that the Vedic Indian saw the power of his songs and melodies far above the powers of the devas? It may be both, but they stress especially the last.

5. What has been said under heading 4 implied that the devas had no unlimited power. In their strength they are limited as might be surmised from the tales about their struggle with the asuras. They got hold of the udgītha and so they were able to ward off the asuras; cf. Ch. Up. 1,2,1: 7: cf. also BAU. 1,3,1: 2: 7: and they got the better of them, udgīthena (asurān) atyayāma. The Aṅgīrasas and Bṛhaspati devoted themselves to the udgītha cf. Ch. Up. 1,2,10: 11:.

Limited is also the knowledge of the devas (and of the asuras as well) and they set out to acquire insight into the essence of ātman by which they could gain the worlds and could fulfil their desires; cf. Ch. Up. 8,7,2: and they went as brahmacārins to father Prajāpati for 32 years; cf. Ch. Up. 8,7,3: When reading those chapters Ch. Up. 8,9,1: 8,10,1: 8,11,3: 8,12,6: we received the impression that the subjects were too deep for them and that Indra, yet heading the devas, was not the brightest pupil — at least he has been depicted there as having quite a number of difficulties; cf. Ch. Up. 9,1: and 10,1: 11,1: of the same 8th prapaṭhaka. And so the story finishes recording Indra having studied for over 101 years under the tutorship of Prajāpati. It does not make too good an impression. All these things become clear as we shall see afterwards, that knowledge and insight into the essence of nature and the Universe fulfil a man's desires and make him "immortal" i.e. full of vitality, vigorous and longliving. So according to Ch. Up. 1,4,2: the devas had some doubts about Mṛtyu: devā vai mṛtyor bibhyatas trayiṃ cidyāṃ prāvīṇan. "Then after penetrating into the three Vedas, they became immortals" tat pravīṇya devā amṛtā abhayaḥ abhavan (Ch. Up. 1,4,4:). The very same story we find related in BAU. 5,2,1: etc. where devas, human beings and asuras receive their lessons from Prajāpati.

Their power over human life is not quite so vast as one would imagine. Their powers in giving life seem to have been divided among Viṣṇu, Tvaṣṭar, Prajāpati and Dhātār and some others; cf. BAU. 6,4,21: Viṣṇu prepares the womb, Tvaṣṭar (the heavenly craftsman) the mould and shape of the new human being. Prajāpati impregnates and Dhātār gives life. But men ask several devas for fertility: Sinī āli garbham dñehi, so they approach to the Aśvins and Vāyu.

But as a whole it does not seem that the late-Vedic period regards the devas as utmost powerful and majestic. They have lost much of their prestige and respect. They really make a poor show and are presented to us as little more than highly superior human beings.

6. The former position of the devas, when every one believed that almost everything might be received from their powers and intercession, has passed into something entirely new. It is vidyā "knowledge" by which anything may be reached, and the purport of the oldest Upaniṣads comes to this: everything can be had and acquired and gained by "true insight". So Ch. Up. 5,1,4: tells us that quite clearly: yo ha vai sampadam veda, sa bāsmāi kāmāḥ padyante daivāḥ sa mānusaḥ ca: "whoever knows thoroughly what is prosperity, for him all desires from human or divine origin will come true". Ch. Up. 8,12,6: acknowledges a great power to the devas, but that is only because they have the true insight into the ātman. This only accounts for those devas, who live in heaven (the world) of brahman. We quoted already above Ch. Up. 1,4,5: where knowledge has been taught as a means of becoming devas and "immortal". BAU. 1,3,16: says: "whoever knows the true essence of Mṛtyu and his ways, he will overcome Mṛtyu". evam ha vā enam eṣā devatā mṛtyum ativahati, ya evam veda "with the help of the devatā". BAU. 1,4,10: tells us that even the devas cannot influence for the worse a man who has true knowledge of ātman and brahman. So does BAU. 2,4,5: 6: ātmano vā are darśanena śravaṇena matyā vijñānena idaṃ sarvaṃ viditam; and 6: idaṃ brahma, idaṃ kṣatram ime lokāḥ, ime devāḥ, imāni bhūtāni, idaṃ sarvaṃ yad ayaṃ ātmā. And how important this understanding is, BAU 3,7,1: tells us: sa brahmavit, sa lokavit, sa devavit, sa vedavit, sa bhūtavit, sa ātmavit, sa sarvavit: "he knows everything, who has insight in brahma, world, deva and vedas, beings and ātman". Really, BAU. 4,1,2—7: tells us that knowledge, expressed in words, makes one overlord over everything — makes us a deva, even gives us a place among the devas: nainam vāg jahāti enam bhūtāny abhikṣaranti sarvāni, devo bhūtvā devān āpyeti: ya evam vidvān etad upāste! So it does not amaze us that BAU 4,4,16: relates that: tad devā jyotiṣāṃ jyotiḥ, āyur ha upāstate 'mṛtam: Radhakrishnan renders: "in front of which the year revolves with its days, that the gods worship as the light of lights, as life immortal" ³). So it is only by the light of knowledge that the devas gained their immortality.

7. But more: one becomes a deva or at least "becomes one of them": sa ya etad evam amṛtam veda, caśūnām eva eko bhūtvā (Ch. Up. 3,6,3:) and so by knowing the amṛtam one becomes one of the Rudras (Ch. Up. 3,7,3:) or one of the ādityas (3,8,3:) or of the Maruts (3,9,3:) or one of the Sādhyas (3,10,3:). Again I quote Ch. Up.

1,4,5: tat praviśya yad amṛtā devās tad amṛto bhavati which Senart renders: "en y pénétrant, il devient immortel comme les dieux". BAU. 1,4,15: instructs us about the way to deva-hood: tasmād Agnāv eva deveṣu lokam icchante, "c'est pourquoi c'est en Agni que l'on souhaite une place parmi les dieux"; and BAU. 1,5,1: relates: that who knows undestructibility, will go to the devas: sa devān apigacchati.

8. Nowhere we shall be able to trace signs of creatorship among the devas. It might come out of the hands of brahman (BAU. 1,4,6:) or Prajāpati, but surely nothing of the sort with the devas. Ch. Up. 1,7,7: 8: atha ya etad evamvidvān sāmā gāyate, ubhau sa gāyati, so amunaiva sa eṣa ye cāmuṣmāt parāṇco lokās tāṃśi cāpnoti deva-kāmāṃśi ca: "through the sāman one can gain worlds which are beyond and things desired by the devas". These quotations are to be cited to state that the devas are not the origin of this world and nowhere in Ch. Up. or in BAU. are we able to find a trace of this creatorship of the devas. Thus passages like: BAU. 1,4,6: saiṣā brahmaṇo 'tisṛṣṭiḥ; yac chreyaso devān asṛjata; atha yan martyaḥ sann amṛtān asṛjata, tasmād atisṛṣṭiḥ. They clearly give us the opinion of a difference between devas and human beings (martyās). Radhakrishnan renders: "this is the highest creation of Brahmā, namely that he created the gods, who are superior to him. Although mortal himself he created the immortals. Therefore it is the highest creation". Here one feels that still no philosophical check exists on their thoughts, as it is quite evident that effectus quaerit causam proportionatam. So no mortal can give "immortality" except by instrumental action.

9. Atman is of far greater importance than any other force upon this earth or hereafter. BAU. 2,4,5: shows clearly in the summing-up that the driving force in every human being is his ātman; and we find the same in BAU. 4,5,6: na vā are devānām kāmāya devāḥ priyā bhavanti, ātmanas tu kāmāya devāḥ priyāḥ bhavanti. And BAU. 4,5,7: everything can be found in ātman. Brahma, kṣatram, lokāḥ, devāḥ; vedāḥ: idam sarvam yad ayam ātmā. Really devas are one among other groups of influential or non-influential powers.

10. The devas have to be regarded as a group led by a chief. This chief is Indra; cf. Ch. Up. 8,7,2: The asuras are headed by Virocana. It seems that the Indians of the late-Vedic period do not see much difference between them, except that the asuras are always out to inflict trouble; cf. Ch. Up. 1,2,2—6: They both are descendants of Prajāpati and they both received their training in religious and philosophical knowledge from him (Ch. Up. 8,8,4:). So one might believe that Prajāpati is really the God in sensu stricto, though I should not like to insist on this opinion. In quite a few texts he does not come second, but even lower on the ladder of gradation. Yājñavalkya is asked by his intelligent wife about the basis of everything: kasmin nu khalu āpa otāi ca pratāi ca iti; she always receives an answer connected with room and space, Vāyu, antarākṣa, Gandharvalokeṣu, candralokeṣu, nakṣatralokeṣu, devalokeṣu (high and respectable place, but just below pure planetary spaces), Indralokeṣu, Prajāpatilokeṣu (even this is not the highest), Brahmalokeṣu. About their basis and foundation Yājñavalkya does not want to answer. It is too (magically) dangerous (BAU. 3,6,1:).

In a discussion of the foundations and their godheads (BAU. 3,9,12—24:) a number of old-time devas are mentioned; they do not show much gradation amongst themselves and one receives the impression that they all (Varuṇa, Soma, Agni, Yama, and others) belong to the rank and file. However, talking on the pleasures and joys of different lokāḥ — let alone what they thought them to be — we surely learn some kind of gradation: men, gandharvas, ancestors, karmadevāḥ and ājānadevāḥ, Prajāpati and brahmalokāḥ (BAU. 4,3,33:). Interesting is the distinction between devas through pious works and devas by origin. Maybe this tiny and trifling remark shows us that in the heart of the late-Vedic Indian the devas had still some hidden corner, where he felt olden times when the devas were looked upon as great and mighty superhuman beings. In connexion with this I should like to mention the pathin devānām. Already in RV. and AV. we came across this expression, but I omitted it from the research as it did not tell us more than that the devas travel along their own highways. But in Ch. Up. the deva-roads seem to have a somewhat greater importance and another meaning. It is not any longer the road of the devas only, but the way of the devas to Brahman as well. The importance is relevant (Ch. Up. 5,3,2:) Vettba pathor devayānasya pitryānasyaca vyāvartanam iti. And the context shows that this is a very vital question, for as the boy goes back to his father, he tells him the whole story and his father, in order to learn the answer, goes to the king and asks to become the king's disciple. Ch. Up. 4,15,5: relates the importance to us: sa enam brahma gamayati "this road runs to brahman". Esā devapatho brahmapathah, "this deva-way is the brahman road, whosoever follows this path, shall not have to come back" (i.e. die again). It also shows that the devas are an intermediate stage between us and brahman. BAU. 4,3,33: and 6,2,15: tell us the same; from devalokāḥ we have to come to the highest stage of happiness; and the same story as related above about the important question concerning the devapathin is

1,4,5: tat praviśya yad amṛtā devās tad amṛto bhavati which Senart renders: "en y pénétrant, il devient immortel comme les dieux". BAU. 1,4,15: instructs us about the way to deva-hood: tasmād Agnāv eta deveṣu lokam icchante, "c'est pourquoi c'est en Agni que l'on souhaite une place parmi les dieux"; and BAU. 1,5,1: relates: that who knows undestructibility, will go to the devas: sa devān apigacchati.

8. Nowhere we shall be able to trace signs of creatorship among the devas. It might come out of the hands of brahman (BAU. 1,4,6:) or Prajāpati, but surely nothing of the sort with the devas. Ch. Up. 1,7,7: 8: atha ya etad evamvidvān sāma gāyate, ubhan sa gāyati, so amunaiva sa eṣa ye cāmuṣmāt parāṇco lokās tāṃśi cāpnoti deva-kāmāṃśi ca: "through the sāman one can gain worlds which are beyond and things desired by the devas". These quotations are to be cited to state that the devas are not the origin of this world and nowhere in Ch. Up. or in BAU. are we able to find a trace of this creatorship of the devas. Thus passages like: BAU. 1,4,6: śaiṣā brahmaṇo 'tiṣṭhīḥ; yac chreyaso devān arjata; atha yan martyaḥ jann amṛtān arjata, tasmād atisṭhīḥ. They clearly give us the opinion of a difference between devas and human beings (martyāḥ). Radhakrishnan renders: "this is the highest creation of Brahmā, namely that he created the gods, who are superior to him. Although mortal himself he created the immortals. Therefore it is the highest creation". Here one feels that still no philosophical check exists on their thoughts, as it is quite evident that effectus quaerit causam proportionatam. So no mortal can give "immortality" except by instrumental action.

9. Ātman is of far greater importance than any other force upon this earth or hereafter. BAU. 2,4,5: shows clearly in the summing-up that the driving force in every human being is his ātman; and we find the same in BAU. 4,5,6: na vā are devānām kāmāya devāḥ priyā bhavanti, ātmanas tu kāmāya devāḥ priyāḥ bhavanti. And BAU. 4,5,7: everything can be found in ātman. Brahma, kṣatram, lokāḥ, devāḥ; vedāḥ; idam sarvam yad ayam ātmā. Really devas are one among other groups of influential or non-influential powers.

10. The devas have to be regarded as a group led by a chief. This chief is Indra; cf. Ch. Up. 8,7,2:. The asuras are headed by Virocana. It seems that the Indians of the late-Vedic period do not see much difference between them, except that the asuras are always out to inflict trouble; cf. Ch. Up. 1,2,2—6:. They both are descendants of Prajāpati and they both received their training in religious and philosophical knowledge from him (Ch. Up. 8,8,4:). So one might believe that Prajāpati is really the God in sensu stricto, though I should not like to insist on this opinion. In quite a few texts he does not come second, but even lower on the ladder of gradation. Yājñavalkya is asked by his intelligent wife about the basis of everything: kasmīn na khalu āpa utāi ca prajā ca itī: she always receives an answer connected with room and space, Vāyu, antarikṣa, Gandharvalokeṣu, candralokeṣu, nakṣatralokeṣu, devalokeṣu (high and respectable place, but just below pure planetary spaces), Indralokeṣu, Prajāpatilokeṣu (even this is not the highest), Brahmalokeṣu. About their basis and foundation Yājñavalkya does not want to answer. It is too (magically) dangerous (BAU. 3,6,1:).

In a discussion of the foundations and their godheads (BAU. 3,9,12—24:) a number of old-time devas are mentioned; they do not show much gradation amongst themselves and one receives the impression that they all (Varuṇa, Soma, Agni, Yama, and others) belong to the rank and file. However, talking on the pleasures and joys of different lokāḥ — let alone what they thought them to be — we surely learn some kind of gradation: men, gandharvas, ancestors, kṛmadetvāḥ and ājāmadetvāḥ, Prajāpati and brahmalokāḥ (BAU. 4,3,33:). Interesting is the distinction between devas through pious works and devas by origin. Maybe this tiny and trifling remark shows us that in the heart of the late-Vedic Indian the devas had still some hidden corner, where he felt older times when the devas were looked upon as great and mighty superhuman beings. In connexion with this I should like to mention the pathin devānāṃ. Already in RV. and AV. we came across this expression, but I omitted it from the research as it did not tell us more than that the devas travel along their own highways. But in Ch. Up. the deva-roads seem to have a somewhat greater importance and another meaning. It is not any longer the road of the devas only, but the way of the devas to Brahman as well. The importance is relevant (Ch. Up. 5,3,2:) Vettiṭha pathor detayānasya pitṛyānasyaś ca vyāvartanam iti. And the context shows that this is a very vital question, for as the boy goes back to his father, he tells him the whole story and his father, in order to learn the answer, goes to the king and asks to become the king's disciple. Ch. Up. 4,15,5: relates the importance to us: sa enaṃ brahmas gamayati "this road runs to Brahman". Eṣa devapatho brahmapathah, "this deva-way is the Brahman road, whosoever follows this path, shall not have to come back" (i.e. die again). It also shows that the devas are an intermediate stage between us and Brahman. BAU. 4,3,33: and 6,2,15: tell us the same; from devalokāḥ we have to come to the highest stage of happiness; and the same story as related above about the important question concerning the devapathin is found again in BAU. 6,2,2:.

According to our view Brahmā is surely the concept of the Highest Being or God in sensu stricto. Ch. Up. 3,14: already gives a descriptive definition of Brahman, which we could partly accept as of the Supreme Being. See also BAU. 4,5,15: and 4,4,22: But worth noticing is that we find nowhere Brahmā mentioned as a deva or as belonging to a group of devas. Except one passage BAU. 1,4,6: where Senart explains in a note: "Agni et Soma étant les éléments du sacrifice, du brahman, le texte est, par ce détour, ramené à l'identification de Brahman." But we had better apply brahman-ātman to the sarve devāḥ. The devas may help us to Brahman! Ch. Up. 3,11,2: gives us a sort of prayer: devās, tenāhaṃ satyena mā virādhiṣi brahmaṇā rendered by Senart: "Aussi vrai, ô dieux, puisse-je ne jamais être séparé de brahman".

BAU. 1,4,12: sa (brahma) viśam asṛjata yāny etāni devajātāni gaṇāśa ākhyāyante: where Brahmā is the origin of the deva-generations, but in 15: there is a rather queer expression: tad agninaiva deveṣu brahmābhavat. Radhakrishnan renders this pericope: "among the gods that Brahmā existed as fire". The queer point is: abhavat. Senart renders it: "s'est réalisé" but this could be translated by "was" or "became". But this "réalisé" might be just a vague expression by which one can suggest everything without stating too much. "Realize" could be rendered as: to appear, to incarnate oneself, as Hume translates in his "The 13 principal Upanisads" 6). Max Müller 7) renders: "among the devas that Brahman existed as Agni (fire) only ..." But it could be too: "Brahma makes his power felt by Agni, expresses himself, realizes, materializes himself"; and one does not exaggerate in thinking that this last interpretation tallies with the idea of abhavat deveṣu, just as in: etābhyāṃ hi rūpābhyāṃ brahmābhavat, a few lines lower.

11. We meet the concept of deva in other expressions: the abstractum: devatā and the term adhidevatam. The former term being rendered by Hume, Müller and Radhakrishnan 8) by "gods", the adverb is translated by Senart by "l'ordre objectif" in opposition to adhyātman rendered by "l'ordre subjectif", and on p. 44, he comments as follows: devatāḥ "les divinités désignent souvent les objets perceptibles et sensibles par opposition au prāṇa, à l'esprit qui perçoit: c'est dans ce sens que je traduis adhidevatam par le "point de vue objectif": Ch. Up. 3,18,2: gives a definition per partes. However Ch. Up. 6,15,1: 2: suggest the use of devatā in the sense of Supreme Being: tejaḥ paratīyām devatāyām, and BAU. 1,5,20: yathaisā devatā, evaṃ saḥ. Senart and Hume 9) put after devatā Prajāpati between brackets. I do not see an intrinsic reason for this explanation, however in § 15 Prajāpati has been mentioned. Müller inserts "Hiranyagarbha" 10), so does Radhakrishnan. It certainly suggests here a supreme Being, being honoured and served by every being: yathaitāṃ devatāṃ sarvāṇi bhūtāny avanti, evaṃ bhūtvaidam sarvāṇi bhūtāny avanti. And if Prajāpati has been thought behind this devatām, then certainly it means here more than anywhere else. Here it suggests no human or supernatural power, but divinity with capital D.

BAU. 3,6,1: Gārgi, searching for the last cause and foundation of the universe, asks: kasmin nu khalu brahmalokā otāś ca protāś ceti? And Yājñavalkya replies: anatiprayāṃ vai devatāṃ atiprecchasi. Gārgi mātīprākṣīr iti. "Do not keep on asking after that deity. It is dangerous: mā te mārdbhā vipaptai "beware that your head does not blow off". In other words your life is at stake. No doubt that also the Indian thinker feels the presence of God himself, whatever term he uses. Here the word devatā seems to have the meaning of God in sensu strictissimo. Ch. Up. 4,2,2: anu ma etāṃ, bhagavah, devatāṃ lādhi, yāṃ devatām upāssa iti: Hume: "now, sir, teach me that divinity, the divinity that you reverence". The context of lādhi and upāssa does not force us to accept devatā as God in sensu stricto, but it shows some inner longing. The person speaking in this passage is Jānaśruti Paurāyaṇa and he does not believe so much in gods as in riches and the gods of the earth. He is a śūdra. Maybe that implies an explanation.

12. BAU. 5,15,4: gives a short and beautiful prayer in metre. Though "give us this day our daily bread" has certainly not been forgotten, there is a touching request for forgiveness of sins: yuyodhy aśmaj jhātāṇam enaḥ "remove from us sin"). Already RV. and AV. show us Agni — to whom the prayer is directed — as the physician, also of the wounds of the soul.

13. Devas and sacrifices belong together. Here too we are under the impression that the sacrifices are wanted by the devas. Moreover they need them and believe in them. They only create by offerings.

a) They wanted the rites: BAU. 3,8,9: Yajamānaṃ devāḥ (pramāṇanti), "the devas honour and exalt the offerer".

b) Ch. Up. 2,24,1: this whole khanda reveals to us the importance of sacrifice as it shows the regular practice of everyday life, in which the Vasus, Rudras, Adityas and Viśve Devas have their turns. Devas and sacrifice belong together. So BAU. 1,2,7: discloses to us the aśva-medhas and other sacrificial animals: paśūn devatābhyah prayauhat, and: anum yaj, anum yajeti ekam-ekam devam seems to be a proverb: "each divinity his own offering".

BAU. 1,4,16: Atbo 'yam vā ātmā sarveṣāṃ bhūtānāṃ lokah:

found again in BAU. 6,2,2.

According to our view Brahmā is surely the concept of the Highest Being or God in sensu stricto. Ch. Up. 3,14: already gives a descriptive definition of Brahman, which we could partly accept as of the Supreme Being. See also BAU. 4,5,15: and 4,4,22: But worth noticing is that we find nowhere Brahmā mentioned as a deva or as belonging to a group of devas. Except one passage BAU. 1,4,6: where Senart explains in a note: "Agni et Soma étant les éléments du sacrifice, du brahman, le texte est, par ce détour, ramené à l'identification de Brahman." But we had better apply brahman-ātman to the sarve devāḥ. The devas may help us to Brahman! Ch. Up. 3,11,2: gives us a sort of prayer: devās, tenāhaṃ satyena mā virādhīṣi brahmaṇā rendered by Senart: "Aussi vrai, ô dieux, puisse-je ne jamais être séparé de brahman".

BAU. 1,4,12: sa (brahma) viśam aṣṭajā yāny etāni devajātāni gaṇaiś ākhyāyante: where Brahmā is the origin of the deva-generations, but in 15: there is a rather queer expression: tad agnirāiva deveṣu brahmābhavat. Radhakrishnan renders this pericope: "among the gods that Brahmā existed as fire". The queer point is: abhavat. Senart renders it: "s'est réalisé" but this could be translated by "was" or "became". But this "réalisé" might be just a vague expression by which one can suggest everything without stating too much. "Realize" could be rendered as: to appear, to incarnate oneself, as Hume translates in his "The 13 principal Upanisads" ⁹⁾. Max Müller ⁷⁾ renders: "among the devas that Brahman existed as Agni (fire) only ...". But it could be too: "Brahma makes his power felt by Agni, expresses himself, realizes, materializes himself", and one does not exaggerate in thinking that this last interpretation tallies with the idea of abhavat deveṣu, just as in: etābhyāṃ hi rūpābhyāṃ brahmābhavat, a few lines lower.

11. We meet the concept of deva in other expressions: the abstractum: devatā and the term adhidevatam. The former term being rendered by Hume, Müller and Radhakrishnan ⁸⁾ by "gods", the adverb is translated by Senart by "l'ordre objectif" in opposition to adhyātman rendered by "l'ordre subjectif", and on p. 44, he comments as follows: devatāḥ "les divinités désignent souvent les objets perceptibles et sensibles par opposition au prāṇa, à l'esprit qui perçoit: c'est dans ce sens que je traduis adhidevatam par le "point de vue objectif": Ch. Up. 3,18,2: gives a definition per partes. However Ch. Up. 6,15,1: 2: suggest the use of devatā in the sense of Supreme Being: tejah paritāyām devatāyām, and BAU. 1,5,20: yathasā devatā, evaṃ tat. Senart and Hume ⁹⁾ put after devatā Prajāpati between brackets. I do not see an intrinsic reason for this explanation, however in § 15 Prajāpati has been mentioned. Müller inserts "Hiraṇyagarbha" ¹⁰⁾, so does "ātman is the world wherein every creature moves about". sa yaj juhoti, yad yajate tena devānām lokaḥ: "world of the devas is for him who sacrifices". Radhakrishnan¹³) renders this passage thus: "now this self verily is the world of all beings. In so far as he makes offerings and sacrifices, he becomes the world of the Gods"; and the author explains loka as "world, object or enjoyment". But further on he says: "the interdependence of man and the world including deities, seers, fathers, animals, is brought out". BAU. 1,5,2: explains the verse: dve devān abhājayat by: hutamīca prahutamīca; tasmād devebhyo juhvati ca pra ca juhvati "of two he lets take part the gods; therefore one offers by hutam and prahutam."

BAU. 3,1,8: 9: explains the connexion between sacrifice and devas, and even brahman, and here I refer to Radhakrishnan op. cit. p. 213 f.

c) Even the devas themselves believe in bringing offers. BAU. 6,2,9—14: reveal the devas sacrificing and making offerings. Ch. Up. 5,4,2: tasminn etasminn agnau devāḥ śraddhām juhvati "into this fire the devas are offering their faith", and this offering of the devas is disclosed in the 5th—8th khaṇḍa of the same prapāśhaka.

d) So we come to our last point: sacrificing, the devas create or produce vital elements and even other devas. Here Ch. Up. 5,4: is a duplicate of BAU. 6,2: etc. Ch. Up. 5,4,2: tasyāhuteḥ soma rājā sambhavati: "out of this offering king Soma received birth".

14. Several epithets are given to the devas, not like in RV. and AV. time and again, but once or twice:

a) amṛtatvam Ch. Up. 2,22,2: *Amṛtatvam devebhyā āgāyāntī āgāyer*¹⁴); cf. also BAU. 3,9,10: where amṛtam itself is called a devatā.

b) They do not know any evil (physical, psychical or moral) na ha vai devān pāpaṃ gacchati BAU. 1,5,20: On evil and the delivery from evil S. Rodhe wrote a very interesting paper. He states the following facts: In RV. pāpa is mostly used in a moral sense (p. 30); there the derivative pāpman does not appear (p. 33). AV. uses pāpman as ethical and physical evil (p. 33). S. Br. sees it as wrong-doing, in which sense also the Upaniṣads use it (p. 34). He adds: "as a rule pāpa is used adjectively characterizing an evil-minded man or woman or an evil deed" (36). Worth noticing is his remark on p. 38: "But also sin is regarded as a physical evil, not strictly distinguished from disease, it is believed to be the cause of, and so deliverance from pāpa (which he mentioned p. 37 as a synonym of pāpa) may mean deliverance from sin too".

c) They have a riding animal; cf. BAU. 1,1,2: Hayo bhūtvā devān deva entre les deva, nous avons atteint la lumière la plus haute."

The phrase siro devatāḥ points the same way. As regards Ch. Up. 6,3,2: Senart puts this passage between brackets. We find the same in Ch. Up. 6,8,6; but more explicitly mentioned. BAU. 3,9,3—9: 10—19: suggests the same explanation, where we find annam (10) striyaḥ (11) satyam (12) dīśaḥ (13) mṛtyu (14) asu (15) explained as devatās. I have no doubt that no Indian would ever have believed those senses and experiences to be a deity, but regarded them as powers, natural and supranormal, he could not cope with. Forces above his power and therefore felt as super-natural although preternatural which is more correct.

Surveying the epithets attributed to the idea of deva in Ch. Up. and BAU. nothing forces us to see deva, devatā as Supreme Being. Except in a few singular cases where it concerns once Prajāpati (and some doubt about the correct interpretation is possible) and the other times brahman-ātman. Again I think it worthwhile to repeat: we do not hear brahman-ātman called anywhere: deva. To me this is the soundest proof that deva surely does not mean God in the strict sense of the term.

Opinions of the Authorities.

Again we discover that for the greatest number of modern authors the concept of deva has been no problem, so one has to read between the lines and try to discover what they thought of it.

E. W. Hopkins in his "Religions of India": "In the period immediately following the Brāhmaṇas or toward the end of the Brāhmaṇic period, as one will, there is a famous distinction made between the gods. Some gods, it is said, are spirit-gods, some are work-gods. They are born of spirit and of works respectively" (p. 209). And coming more to the point: "In the exposition of this doctrine the old gods are retained as figures. They are not real gods. But they are existent forms of God. They are portions of the Absolute, a form of the Eternal even as man, a form of the same Absolute Being, again described as anthropomorphic" (p. 220). The author does not realize that in a great number of Upaniṣads this has never been said and that the Upaniṣads are not handbooks of fixed theories or philosophical handbooks, but just a juxtaposition of several opinions. Religions of India is the discovery. . . . The gods are but the forms of the ego, and their heaven is mortal. It is false to deny the gods. Indra and the Father-God (Prajāpati) exist, just as men exist, as transient forms of Brahman."

Kamatsappa in his "Hindu conception of the Deity" states that the basis and foundation of everything even of the eight devas, which is the last number mentioned.

This doubt about the number of devas, and the obvious discontent shows a tendency towards a new idea: an abstract force, ruling the world and its foundations.

15. Devas are revealed to us in battle with the Asuras; cf. Ch. Up. 1,2,1: BAU. 1,3,1: It is truly the struggle for paramountcy; whereas in the Vedas the asuras were higher in rank than the devas, here they are their elderly relations, mischievous and wicked brethren. Devas do not win by their own power or cleverness, but just by being shrewd. They know how to get hold of the great powers of the udgitha and how to use it. The asuras might have been the bad brothers, but what about the devas? Ch. Up. 1,2,7: presents them to us as the killers of their brothers.

16. Each deva — at least of a certain ability and capacity — seems to have his own dominion, cf. Ch. Up. 2,24,5: 9: 13: or sāmrājya. So Agni (5) Vāyu (9) Viśvadeva (13). BAU. 3,9,1: ff. disclose the very same.

17. We have now come to the all-important problem: what exactly did the late-Vedic Indian and his authors, compilers of Ch. Up. and BAU. see in a deva? What kind of description and definition has he himself given?

Senart commenting on Ch. Up. 3,13,1: tasya ha vā etasya hṛdayasya pañca devasūṣayaḥ. Sa yo 'sya prāṇi suṣṭiḥ sa prāṇaḥ, tac cakṣuḥ sa ādityaḥ. "Le cœur a cinq canaux des deva. Le canal de l'est c'est prāṇa, c'est la vue, c'est le soleil", and he says of deva: "C'est à dire des "sens", qui sont souvent qualifiés de "dieux" (deva) et mis en relation avec les souffles vitaux" o.c. p. 37.

Ch. Up. 4,3,4: tau vā etau devau samvargau: vāyur eva deveṣu, prāṇaḥ prāṇeṣu: here we see deva and prāṇa put on the same level. BAU. 1,5,17: is so daring to call devāḥ prāṇā: sa putrenārcāmīmīḥ loke pratitiṣṭhati; atha nam ete devāḥ prāṇā amṛtā āvṛanti; and again BAU. 1,5,22: sa yathauṣām prāṇānām madhyamāḥ prāṇaḥ, evam etāsām devatānām vāyuh. Again we see Vāyu on the same level as prāṇa.

This very comparison with natural powers would make us believe that deva is something like a force of nature. A force above human strength, a power exceeding every human effort. Ch. Up. 3,17,7: ud vāyam tamasāḥ pari jyotiḥ paśyanta uttaram svāḥ paśyanta uttaram devam devatrā sūryam aganma jyotir uttamam, where Senart translates: "voyant, au sortir des ténèbres, la lumière supérieure, Sūrya

deva entre les deva, nous avons atteint la lumière la plus haute."

The phrase tiṣṭo devatāḥ points the same way. As regards Ch. Up. 6,3,2: Senart puts this passage between brackets. We find the same in Ch. Up. 6,8,6: but more explicitly mentioned. BAU. 3,9,3—9: 10—19: suggests the same explanation, where we find annam (10) striyaḥ (11) satyam (12) dīśaḥ (13) mṛtyu (14) asu (15) explained as devatās. I have no doubt that no Indian would ever have believed those senses and experiences to be a deity, but regarded them as powers, natural and supranormal, he could not cope with. Forces above his power and therefore felt as super-natural although preternatural which is more correct.

Surveying the epithets attributed to the idea of deva in Ch. Up. and BAU. nothing forces us to see deva, devatā as Supreme Being. Except in a few singular cases where it concerns once Prajāpati (and some doubt about the correct interpretation is possible) and the other times brahman-ātman. Again I think it worthwhile to repeat: we do not hear brahman-ātman called anywhere: deva. To me this is the soundest proof that deva surely does not mean God in the strict sense of the term.

Opinions of the Authorities.

Again we discover that for the greatest number of modern authors the concept of deva has been no problem, so one has to read between the lines and try to discover what they thought of it.

E. W. Hopkins in his "Religions of India": "In the period immediately following the Brāhmanas or toward the end of the Brāhmanic period, as one will, there is a famous distinction made between the gods. Some gods, it is said, are spirit-gods, some are work-gods. They are born of spirit and of works respectively" (p. 209). And coming more to the point: "In the exposition of this doctrine the old gods are retained as figures. They are not real gods. But they are existent forms of God. They are portions of the Absolute, a form of the Eternal even as man, a form of the same Absolute Being, again described as anthropomorphic" (p. 220). The author does not realize that in a great number of Upaniṣads this has never been said and that the Upaniṣads are not handbooks of fixed theories or philosophical handbooks, but just a juxtaposition of several opinions, that are only philosophical in sensu latiore. But what the same author in his "Religions of India" (p. 225) says, is quite true: "the relativity of divinity is the discovery of the Upaniṣads. The gods are but the forms of the ego, and their heaven is mortal. It is false to deny the gods. Indra and the Father-God (Prajāpati) exist, just as men exist, as transient forms of Brahman".

Kumarappa in his "Hindu conception of the Deity" states that the basis and foundation of everything even of the eight devas, which is the last number mentioned.

This doubt about the number of devas, and the obvious discontent shows a tendency towards a new idea: an abstract force, ruling the world and its foundations.

15. Devas are revealed to us in battle with the Asuras; cf. Ch. Up. 1,2,1: BAU. 1,3,1. It is truly the struggle for paramountcy; whereas in the Vedas the asuras were higher in rank than the devas, here they are their elderly relations, mischievous and wicked brethren. Devas do not win by their own power or cleverness, but just by being shrewd. They know how to get hold of the great powers of the udgitha and how to use it. The asuras might have been the bad brothers, but what about the devas? Ch. Up. 1,2,7: presents them to us as the killers of their brothers.

16. Each deva — at least of a certain ability and capacity — seems to have his own dominion, cf. Ch. Up. 2,24,5: 9: 13: or sāmājya. So Agni (5) Vāyu (9) Viśvadeva (13). BAU. 3,9,1: ff. disclose the very same.

17. We have now come to the all-important problem: what exactly did the late-Vedic Indian and his authors, compilers of Ch. Up. and BAU. see in a deva? What kind of description and definition has he himself given?

Senart commenting on Ch. Up. 3,13,1: tasya ha vā etasya hṛdayasya pañca devasūṣayah. Sa yo 'sya prāṇ sūṣhṇ sa prāṇah, tac cakṣuḥ sa ādityah. "Le cœur a cinq canaux des deva. Le canal de l'est c'est prāṇa, c'est la vue, c'est le soleil", and he says of deva: "C'est à dire des "sens", qui sont souvent qualifiés de "dieux" (deva) et mis en relation avec les souffles vitaux" o.c. p. 37.

Ch. Up. 4,3,4: taṁ vā etau dvau saṁvargau: vāyur eva deveṣu, prāṇah prāṇeṣu: here we see deva and prāṇa put on the same level. BAU. 1,5,17: is so daring to call devāḥ prāṇā: sa putreṇaivānimīḥ loke pratisthīhati; atha nam ete devāḥ prāṇā amṛtā āvīyanti; and again BAU. 1,5,22: sa yathaisām prāṇānām madhyamāḥ prāṇah, evam etāsāṁ devatānām vāyuh. Again we see Vayu on the same level as prāṇa.

This very comparison with natural powers would make us believe that deva is something like a force of nature. A force above human strength, a power exceeding every human effort. Ch. Up. 3,17,7: ud vāyam tamasah pari jyotiḥ pāyanta uttaram svah pāyanta uttaram devam devatrā sūryam aganma jyotiḥ uttamam, where Senart translates: "voyant, au sortir des ténèbres, la lumière supérieure, Sūrya are subject to death, their life-spans varying according to the merit of each individual deva . . .".

But interesting to notice is still that the opinion of the "intellectuals" of Upaniṣad-circles or of the rebellion in Indian thinking — the Buddhists — who really did away with devas altogether, and only retained them to use them as serving spirits of the Buddha — that none of them did receive a mass of followers. They remained within their circles.

"Brahman is one without a second, may be said to be the theme of the Upaniṣads. All the gods and all the powers hitherto recognised are subordinate to Him" (p. 13). And he continues: "Yajñavalkya systematically reduces the number of Gods from 3306 to one, and proclaims Him to be Brahman".

In short, the devas lost every importance and the Indians themselves did not care about the real background of the devas. Hume is of the same opinion in his: The Thirteen Principal Upaniṣads: "In the Upaniṣads a further change occurred. The development of a monistic philosophy removed altogether the necessity of believing in the various Vedic and Brahmanic gods to superintend and operate the different departments of nature or to be coerced into man's service" (p. 52).

In „Die Lehre der Upanisaden" Oldenberg says of the essence of the devas: "Dort ist Hauch, Auge, Rede, kurz der ganze Kreis der auf die Persönlichkeit bezüglichen Kräfte und Funktionen mit dem es diese Formeln und Erklärungen zu tun haben; hier sind die kosmischen Gottheiten wie Erde, Luft, Himmel, Sonne, Mond." And Oldenberg proceeds: "Wie man durch Tapas die Götter in sich fühlte, ähnlich musste es mit dem jenseitigen absoluten Selbst gelingen" (o.c. p. 224).

However, these are only the opinions of the authors and readers of the Upaniṣads. First the devas lost their position to rites and hymns, now to Brahṃā, ātman and the like.

What did the common man think in those days? We cannot say exactly as we have practically no sources of information. We know that early dogmatical Buddhism had not such high respect for the devas as their Vedic contemporaries. We see Buddhism rename them as "factors of life" dharma, which H. von Glasenapp in his "Entwicklungsstufen des Indischen Denkens" renders with "Daseinsmächte". And so Buddhism makes them to nothing else than life-factors and powers that have influence in every stage of everyone's life.

G. P. Malalasekera in Dictionary of Pāli proper names I, p. 1118 says on deva: "A class of beings. As a title the word deva is attributed to any being regarded, in certain respects, as being above the human level. Thus it is used for a king. In a late classification there are three kinds of deva: sammutidevā (conventional gods — e.g. kings and princes); visuddhidevā (beings who are divine by the purity of their great religious merit — arahants and Buddhas) and uppattidevā (beings who are born "divine")." The author continues below: "the devas are generally regarded as sharing kinship and continuity of life with humans; all devas have been men, and may again be born among men . . . All devas are themselves in samsāra, needing salvation. They are subject to death, their life-spans varying according to the merit of each individual deva ...".

But interesting to notice is still that the opinion of the "intellectuals" of Upaniṣad-circles or of the rebellion in Indian thinking — the Buddhists — who really did away with devas altogether, and only retained them to use them as serving spirits of the Buddha — that none of them did receive a mass of followers. They remained within their circles.

"Brahman is one without a second, may be said to be the theme of the Upaniṣads. All the gods and all the powers hitherto recognised are subordinate to Him" (p. 13). And he continues: "Yajñavalkya systematically reduces the number of Gods from 3306 to one, and proclaims Him to be Brahman".

In short, the devas lost every importance and the Indians themselves did not care about the real background of the devas. Hume is of the same opinion in his: The Thirteen Principal Upaniṣads: "In the Upaniṣads a further change occurred. The development of a monistic philosophy removed altogether the necessity of believing in the various Vedic and Brahmanic gods to superintend and operate the different departments of nature or to be coerced into man's service" (p. 52).

In „Die Lehre der Upanisaden" Oldenberg says of the essence of the devas: "Dort ist Hauch, Auge, Rede, kurz der ganze Kreis der auf die Persönlichkeit bezüglichen Kräfte und Funktionen mit dem es diese Formeln und Erklärungen zu tun haben; hier sind es die kosmischen Gottheiten wie Erde, Luft, Himmel, Sonne, Mond." And Oldenberg proceeds: "Wie man durch Tapas die Götter in sich fühlte, ähnlich musste es mit dem jenseitigen absoluten Selbst gelingen" (o.c. p. 224).

However, these are only the opinions of the authors and readers of the Upaniṣads. First the devas lost their position to rites and hymns, now to Brahṃā, ātman and the like.

What did the common man think in those days? We cannot say exactly as we have practically no sources of information. We know that early dogmatical Buddhism had not such high respect for the devas as their Vedic contemporaries. We see Buddhism rename them as "factors of life" dharma, which H. von Glasenapp in his "Entwicklungsstufen des Indischen Denkens" renders with "Daseinsmächte". And so Buddhism makes them to nothing else than life-factors and powers that have influence in every stage of everyone's life.

G. P. Malalasekera in Dictionary of Pāli proper names I, p. 1118 says on deva: "A class of beings. As a title the word deva is attributed to any being regarded, in certain respects, as being above the human level. Thus it is used for a king. In a late classification there are three kinds of deva: sammutidevā (conventional gods — e.g. kings and princes); visuddhidevā (beings who are divine by the purity of their great religious ...); saṃsāra-devā (beings who are born ...). The first two are generally humans; all devas have been men, and may again be born among men ... All devas are themselves in saṃsāra, needing salvation. They namen eines Gottes spalten sich von ihm als selbständige Göttergestalten ab".

But slowly the idea covered by the term deva was fading away. Where they were superhuman powers in the RV., they slowly became demigods who had still some influence, but they were not so powerful and helpful and inclined to help as in the AV. just these awful qualities which were the main reason also for their worship and their prayers for help, viz. to smother those adverse powers. Surely, there has been a long period of development. No need to believe that the magical trait, just mentioned, has been always as strong as in later times. The RV. gives an impression of less strong magical influence than the AV. But we must never forget that the RV. shows far more priestly influence, than the somewhat more popular AV.

As the Indians tried always to eliminate those adverse powers, they tried by prayers and by rites and magic songs and magical offerings to put aside their fright for the devas. Once they overcame this fear, the worship had gone too. We saw this stage coming on in the Brāhmaṇas and growing to full force in the early Upaniṣadic Period. So in this latest epoch of our research, we see that the Vedic Indian looked for other means as well. They found them in their own thoughts. Deep meditation and reflection on life and its components, social and religious life, enabled them to discard their fear for dark powers. They the same fear for the instability of this earthly existence, arose the fear of repeated death and the cyclical return of birth. Here originated the striving for mokṣa.

But there arises another problem. Has the term deva also been the term for God in sensu stricto to the Vedic Indian? If not, so, had they any notion of something higher? In his "die Lehre der Upaniṣaden" Oldenberg already states: "Die Vorstellung eines Gottes, der seinem Wesen nach von den Göttern des Veda völlig verschieden ist, tritt wie bekannt sporadisch schon in sehr alter Zeit auf" (o.c. p. 236).

However, we cannot come to firm conclusions. The Vedas are works of the intellectuals, so we do not know much about the "commoner". But even to the composers of the Vedas there have been doubts about the divinity (in sensu stricto) of the devas. During

FINAL CONCLUSIONS

Summarizing the study we made of deva, we must state that it is impossible to give a fixed meaning of the concept of deva, as the contents of the concept have been changing all the time. Right from the beginning we saw a change in value between the Rigveda and the Atharvavedic use of this term concerned. Again in Brahmanic and afterwards in the Upaniṣadic period. But one has to admit that the alterations have been always towards lessening its import.

In the RV. the conception of deva was fairly high and I am forced to believe that in pre-Vedic times or at least in the period before the composing of the RV., the idea of deva to "Indian" man might have been the idea of God in sensu stricto. If this happened really in India is another problem not to be solved here. But in Vedic times, I would suppose, the concept of deva became a term used for superhuman powers and forces, influencing the Indian in those ages very strongly. It contained some divine traits of character, practically confined to Varuṇa or Mitra-Varuṇa. Prof. A. A. Macdonell in "Vedic Mythology" states: "Varuṇa's character resembles that of the divine ruler in a monotheistic belief in an exalted type" (p. 3).

E. W. Hopkins, speaking on Varuṇa in his "Religions of India", p. 63: "In the portrait of such a god as this, one comes very near to monotheism. The conception of an almost solitary deity, recognised as watcher of wrong, guardian and primitive creator approaches more closely to unitarianism than does the ideal of any physical power in RV." Grassmann and Ludwig von Schröder were of the same opinion³).

L. von Schröder in his: "Arische Religion", I, p. 295, states (what we would like to ascertain) that it is a general usage that new on-coming ideas borrow their names from the older already existing and named figures. Thus also Deva had been borrowed from other powers. Schröder says: "Alte Göttergestalten verblassen, verändern sich bis zur Unkenntlichkeit oder verschwinden völlig. Neue und immer neue Gestalten tauchen auf, aus verschiedenen oft unbekannten Quellen und Schichten, setzen sich neben die alten oder an dessen Stelle, wachsen hoch empor, erfüllen das Bewusstsein, doch auch sie ohne Gewähr stetiger Dauer. Namen wechseln und verschieben sich. Beimay we pay worship with oblation?" And the following stanza 2—8 give the presumed qualities of such a deva: 2: Mahitvaiko rājā... yasya chāyāmṛtaṃ yasya mṛtyuḥ. 3: He fixed and confirmed the two world-spheres krandasi avatai cakabhāne... 4: "by the greatness of whom the wide heaven and great earth, of whom yon wide atmosphere, of whom yon sun is extended": yasya dyauḥ urvī pṛthivī ca mahi yasyād urv antarikṣam, yasyāsan sūro vitato mahitvā.

6: "The waters in the beginning favoured the all, assuming an embryo, the immortal, order-knowing one, over whom, divine ones, the god was" (Whitney-Lanman): āpo agre vṛṣṭam āvan garbbham dadhānā amṛtā rājānāḥ yāsu devīṣu adbi deva āsit, kasmai etc.

AV. 10,8,1: is called by the translator "mystic". And practically every verse of this hymn is of great importance. The industrious reader may test it for himself. I only want to quote a few lines:

22: "who shall worship the everlasting god, who gives superiority."

28: it is called "eka deva and prathamajo jātaḥ".

30: we encounter the same again "everlasting, born of old". And stanza 1: calls this being: "the Chief Brahman". Even AV. 19,54,5: makes a suggestion in this direction: "this time goes on as highest god".

3. The Brāhmaṇas.

They sometimes too allude to a Supreme Being. Jaim. Brāhmaṇa Auswahl § 77: yasmāḥ jāto na paro 'nyo asti ya ābhabhīva bhuvanāni evaḥ prajāpatiḥ prajāyā samratāṇas triṇi jyotiṃsi sacate sa goḍaṣīti and Caland translates: "Höher als welcher kein anderer geboren ist, er, der alle Wesen umfasst, Prajapati mit den Geschöpfen sich zusammen findend, ist mit den drei Leuchten verbunden". So from the same work § 160: Prajāpatir vāvedam agra eko 'rjyata nānyasy deitīyasy śalyamānaḥ: sa aikṣatā: 'ham vāva prathamō 'janīsy aham śreṣṭho smy. asti svin mad ihānyā 3 iti: sa vyaikṣata: so 'nyad ātmano 'dhy uttarato jyāyas tiṣṭhad apaiyat; tad apicchat: kim idam aṁ, yad idam asit? brahma vā smity abravīt, and J. Up. Brāhmaṇa 3,1,1: ekā ha cāva kṛtmā devatā 'rdhadevatā evā 'nyāḥ, ayam eva yo 'yam parate: eja eva sarveṣāṃ devānāṃ gṛahāḥ. "One entire deity there is; the others are half-deities, this one namely who cleanses: He is the seizer of all the devas."

And J. Up. Br. 3,2,2: 4: tau ho 'pajagam mahātmanas caturō deva ekah. kas sa jagāra bhuvanasya gopāḥ. "He sang unto them: One god — who is he? — swallowed up four magnanimous ones, being a keeper of creation" and the answer is given in 10: Prajāpatir vai kaḥ, sa hai 'tai jagāra bhuvanasya gopā iti.

I am not going to state absolutely that these quotations prove my research it often struck me that behind the devas there was at the back of the Indian mind either a remembrance of some old belief in a deva (in the strict sense) and this might have been Varuṇa or someone else, or if not a remembrance, then a vague thought that there should be someone else. We do find some places to confirm this.

1. In the RV.

cf. 1,164,6 ff: 10,82,2: 5: 6: and also 10,129,1: and 2:. Here we find the troubling question about Ekam, "das Eine" as Geldner translates.

Ekam is impersonal. The question about this ekam asks for a solution. The authorities are truly at a loss, but their common sense only tells them that there has to be something at the back of everything. RV. 1,164,10: is a question about the personal part of that ekam. I would compare RV. 10,121,1—10: the answer to the question: who is that God: kasmai devāya, is Prajāpati in stanza 10. Geldner has a note attached to it under 1d: "Da der Urgott und erste Schöpfer nicht unter den bekannten Göttern ist, so wird als Refrain die Frage aufgeworfen, welchem Gott nun eigentlich diese Ehre gebühre". So in 1,164,10: the problem is to be solved: who is "the only Lord of creation, the only king, who fixed heaven and earth?"

Also in 3,56,2: the poet inquires "der Eine" as Geldner renders ekam. He adds a note: "Der eine Urgott als Sonne oder Jahr nach Sāyaṇas Meinung" (p. 229) and on p. 403 (I) Geldner explains: "Der Eine ist wohl identisch mit dem Stier Viśvarūpa. So erklären sich die Kühe". Cf. also 3,38,4:. Sāyaṇa however thinks of the year and its six seasons. May be the six burdens are the three Heavens and Earth (cf. 7,87,5:) or the śal urvīḥ (6,47,3:) the six rajaṃsi which in 1,164,6: have been discerned by the Unborn and three fathers and mothers, whom 1,164,10: the one carries.

2. In the AV.

AV. 5,11,6: Whitney translates: "There is one other thing beyond the welkin, there is something hard to attain, hitherward from what is beyond: this, I Varuṇa, knowing it, proclaim to thee." Whitney observes: that this verse befits Varuṇa's mouth (I, p. 238) and Lanman wants to translate: "There is one other thing beyond the welkin (and) beyond (that) one thing (is) something hard to get at durṇaśam cit (if you start) from this side (of them)".

4,2,1: Ya ātmadā baladā yasya viśva upāśate praliṅgam yasya devāḥ, yo 'syete dīpado yai catuṣpadāḥ: kasmai devāya baviṣā vidhema. And Whitney renders: "He, who is soul-giving, strength-giving, of whom all, of whom even the gods, wait upon instruction; who is the Lord of these bipeds, who of quadrupeds — to what god may we pay worship with oblation?" And the following stanza 2—8 give the presumed qualities of such a deva: 2: Mahitvaiko rājā ... yasya chāyāntam yasya mṛtyuh. 3: He fixed and confirmed the two world-spheres krandasi avatai cakabbhāne ... 4: "by the greatness of whom the wide heaven and great earth, of whom yon wide atmosphere, of whom yon sun is extended": yasya dyaur urvī pṛthivī ca mahi yasyād urv antarikṣam, yasyāsan sūro vitato mahitvā.

6: "The waters in the beginning favoured the all, assuming an embryo, the immortal, order-knowing one, over whom, divine ones, the god was" (Whitney-Lanman): āpo agre viśvam āvan garbham dadhānā amṛtā tājñāh yānu devāṣv adhi deva āsit, kasmai etc.

AV. 10,8,1: is called by the translator "mystic". And practically every verse of this hymn is of great importance. The industrious reader may test it for himself. I only want to quote a few lines:

22: "who shall worship the everlasting god, who gives superiority."

28: it is called "eka deva and prathamajo jātah".

30: we encounter the same again "everlasting, born of old". And stanza 1: calls this being: "the Chief Brahman". Even AV. 19,54,5: makes a suggestion in this direction: "this time goes on as highest god".

3. The Brāhmanas.

They sometimes too allude to a Supreme Being. Jaim. Brāhmana Auswahl § 77: yasmāj jāto na paro 'nyo asti ya ābābhāva bhūvanāni cinvā prajāpatiḥ prajāyā samrarāṇas triṇi jyotiṃsi sacate sa ṣoḍāṣīti: and Caland translates: "Höher als welcher kein anderer geboren ist, er, der alle Wesen umfasst. Prajāpati mit den Geschöpfen sich zusammen findend, ist mit den drei Leuchten verbunden". So from the same work § 160: Prajāpatir vāvedam agra eko 'rjyata nānyam dūtīyam paśyamānah; sa aikṣatā: 'ham vāva nāstham 'istam aham istam ...

...

... and na va: ... One entire deity there is; the others are half-deities, this one namely who cleanses: He is the seizer of all the devas."

And J. Up. Br. 3,2,2: 4: taṁ ko 'pajagan mahātmanā caturō deva ekah, kaḥ sa jagāra bhūtanasya gopāh. "He sang unto them: One god — who is he? — swallowed up four magnanimous ones, being a keeper of creation" and the answer is given in 10: Prajāpatir vai kaḥ, sa hai 'taḥ jagāra bhūtanasya gopā iti.

I am not going to state absolutely that these quotations prove clearly that the Vedic Indian had evidence of, and a clear insight into, a Supreme Being. Vague as these quotations sometimes are in their questioning, or else in their shifting to Prajāpati, and from Prajāpati to Brahman, we have still to take the passages into consideration and we cannot ignore them. They had a meaning and they might have come from the depths of memory or out of olden songs and hymns of bygone times — unknown to us — but still living somehow in the memory of the people.

There is yet another way of approach to this problem.

The late Prof. B. A. G. Vroklage SVD. of Nijmegen University in his work: "Godsdienst der Primitieven" first of all quotes the Gaboen pygmies (p. 88 in his chapter about God), who call their deity: "who existed once all alone by himself"; and it is striking to see in the Brāhmaṇas Prajāpati called: "the one who was alone"; cf. P. Br. 4,1,4:.

And p. 104 Vroklage says: "God put on a par with his creature". After having given examples about this matter without number, he proceeds (p. 114): "so among tribes that are still near the basic culture (grondcultuur), but even more among the more advanced primitive peoples we very often encounter an identification of heaven with the Supreme Being". And p. 115: "this identification of the Supreme Being with the sky, has never grown out to real anthropomorphism. Moreover as the idea of Supreme Deity is one with heaven, its description should remain vague and undefined, as the sky does give all reasons to do so" 3).

Now it is quite interesting that a number of authors have thought about our problem with reference to the Vedic religious life. L. von Schröder in Arische Religion, I, p. 306 states: "Es scheint also dass sich ganz leicht und natürlich bei den verschiedensten Völkern aus dem Begriff "Himmel" der Begriff eines Höchsten oder doch eines grossen mächtig waltenden Gottes entwickelt. Wenn das aber der Fall ist, könnte da nicht wirklich Gruppe recht haben? Könnte nicht wirklich der Urindogermanische Himmels-gott Dyeus eine blosser Fiktion sein, und jedes der hier in Betracht kommenden Völker die erwähnte Begriffsentwicklung selbständig in seinem Sonderdasein nach der Trennung von den Stammverwandten durchgemacht haben?" On p. 301 he wrote: "Der urarische Name des Himmels-gottes Djeus stammt von derselben Wurzel wie das urarische Wort deivo oder deiwo "Gott". The Reallexikon der Indogerm. Altertumskunde 1923, I, p. 405 § 2 agrees: "Daneben aber hatte sich schon in der Ursprache eine Bezeichnung für den Begriff eines Gottes festgesetzt, die in einem anderen Anschauungskreis wurzelte: skt. deva, lat. deus (cf. also divus), lit. dievas, ir. dia, altn. tívar nom pl. (skt. divya, griech. dios, göttlich). Das sich so ergebende idg. deivo ist von der idg.

Bezeichnung des Himmels (s.d.) djeus, abgeleitet und bezeichnete, zunächst wohl rein lokal, solche Mächte wie Sonne, Mond, Morgen-wenigstens auf einem Sprachgebiet, nämlich auf dem iranischen (vgl. aw. daēva, npers. dēv "Dämon, Teufel") die letztere Seite zur ausschließlichen Herrschaft gelangt ist, falls man diesen Bedeutungswechsel nicht ausschließlich dem Einfluß der Religion Zoroasters oder seiner Feindschaft den Indern gegenüber zuschreiben will."

And W. Havers in "Christus und die Religionen der Erde", Vienna, 1951, I, p. 710, also states that the Germanic Ziu Tyr is the old Heavenly God in close connexion with the Greek Zeus and Arian Dyans pitā and Lat. Jupiter. He says: "Dieser scheinbare Widerspruch zwischen sprachwissenschaftlicher und religionsgeschichtlicher Betrachtung läßt sich nach Havers' Ansicht" ische par excellence: d.h. den höchsten Himmels-gott."

So O. Karrer in "das Religiöse in der Menschheit und das Christentum", Freiburg, 1936, p. 14, states also: "So darf die Verehrung des "leuchtenden Himmels" vielmehr des Gottesgeheimnisses unter dem Bild des leuchtenden Himmels als Erbgut aus der idg. Vorzeit gelten."

Macdonell in his "Lectures on comparative Religion", p. 63, explains likewise: "In the Chinese popular religion Heaven is the highest God. The polytheistic Greek and Roman religions have Heaven as their highest God, Zeus-Pater and Jupiter is dyans pitar"; cf. also "Arische Religion", I, p. 309, and Peter von Bradke follows suit. But not unnotedly Macdonell remarks:

Asura,

He imo

Iranian

an abs

suppressed Dyans Pitā Asura, whereas it is quite certain that Varuna (asura) grew up out and over the other Asuras, his former equals." About the last clause "grew up out and over the other Asuras" I have a slight doubt. The RV. never says this.

But von Bradke never said that either; in Dyans Asura, p. 19, he wrote: "Asura könnte ein Begriff sein der ursprünglich weder götliches noch wiedergötliches mit Notwendigkeit bezeichnend sich zum einen und andern entwickelt hatte." But still in "Religions of India", p. 58, the author writes: "There is, to be sure, a formal acknowledgment of the fatherhood of Dyaus (among the gods he is father particularly of Dawn, the Āsvins and Indra as there is the motherhood of Earth), but there is no further exaltation". So L. von Schröder, o.c., p. 346: "Der Vatername deutete in den primitiven, streng vaterrechtlichen Zuständen der arischen Zeit wohl schon genug Herrschaft an. War doch der Vater der unumschränkte Herr der Großfamilie während es eigentliche Herrscher und Könige zu jener Zeit wohl noch nicht gab"; and so, o.c., p. 319, von Schröder concludes that it seems quite probable that in those times before RV., the Indians really revered and honoured Dyaus Pitar and Dyaus Asura as their Heavenly father and Heavenly Lord, as their supreme Deity ruling over devas and human beings, but that in later periods Dyaus Pitar and Dyaus Asura had to hand over that sovereignty to Varuṇa Rājā of the Vedic Hymns. A. B. Keith in his "Indian Mythology", p. 21, follows Schröder: "The position of power and elevation which Greek mythology ascribes to Zeus, is not accorded in full to any Vedic deity, but in so far as Zeus has a parallel, it is in Varuṇa, not in Dyaus." W. Havers, o.c., p. 714, thinks that Hauer's³⁾ conclusion is quite right: "Licht ist die beherrschende Vorstellung im religiösen Denken der Indogermanen seit uralters." After quoting he continues: "Gott wird als Quelle und als Inbegriff des Lichtes aufgefasst. Diespiter-Juppiter war aber nicht bloß der "Taghimmel" wie man nach Schrader R.L., II, p. 235, meinen konnte, sondern der Gott des himmlischen Lichtes überhaupt, des nächtlichen wie des Tageslichtes, natürlich auch des Blitzlichtes, er war der Urheber des Lichtes schlechthin, daher sein Beiname Lucetius" (vgl. Kretschmer Glotta 13, 112 f.).

So the authors who made a study of this problem, had nothing against the idea: heaven as a symbol or substitute of the Highest Being and Supreme Deity. Anyhow, practically every important author discovered some monotheistic elements in the RV., either in connection with the ekam (or eka) or with Dyauspitar and Varuṇa Asura.

4. The Upaniṣads.

Also in these works we meet an inclination to revert to an Ultimate Reality. The position of Brahman in Ch. Up. as well as BAU. is so prominent and moreover the mentioning of devas is casual and without any enthusiasm and lacking in reverence or worship. With the fear of those devas so far gone, Brahman is the only cause of everything, the only solution of every problem, cosmic as well as microcosmic. The authors of the Upaniṣads endeavour to stress this very point, that Brahman is the basis that supports everything and is the first Cause.

Oldenberg *) quotes: "Brahman wahrlich war dies (All) im Anfang. Das erschuf die Götter. Als es die Götter erschaffen, liesz es sie diese Welten besteigen . . . Das Brahman selbst aber ging zur jenseitigen Sphäre". S. Br. 11,2,3.

So I may believe there is no reason for any doubt in concluding that the devas were never God par excellence to the Vedic Indian as far as the Vedic sources reveal them to us. Here one has to accept something like a Vacuum behind those "spirits" in our sense, without stressing the point that the devas are spiritual. They were powers and forces that were frightening to the Indian and at times benevolent to him. They occupied his mind virtually to the full. But at the back of his mind the Vedic Indian had still a doubt about the Ultimate Reality of the devas and a desire for something deeper, something like a First Cause. Or even more: an old feeling or reminiscence of bygone times about a Godhead or divinity that governed All and from whom everything comes forth into being.

NOTES TO CHAPTER I

¹⁾ RV. 2,38,10: 3,1,3: 4: 13: 3,2: 5: 4,1: 6,6: 13,1: 17,3: 20,5: 27,3: 33,6: 53,1: 54,17: 59,9: 4,8,3: 15,2: 30,24: 34,11: 47,1: 53,1: 5,2,11: 13,6: 17,1: 26,1: 29,9: 33,3: 42,17: 43,3: 45,1: 49,1: 2: 50,2: 5: 74,2: 81,1: 5: 82,1: 7: 6,16,7: 18,14: 47,28: 56,1: 73,2: 8,65,4: 83,1: 9,11,2: 7: 28,2: 80,4: 86,30: 106,6: 107,23: 109,21: 10,110,5: 139,5: 174,4: etc. etc.

²⁾ R.V. 1,44,11: 12: 3,2,8: 9,9: 5,21,3: 6,16,11.

³⁾ RV. 1,1,1: 76,2: 4: 5: 3,10,7: 13,1: 5,4,3: 21,1: 26,4: 6,16,2: 10.

⁴⁾ "Goddienst der Primitieven", Roermond, 1949; cf. also M. Eliade, "Traité d'histoire des religions", Paris, 1949, § 37.

⁵⁾ J. Gonda, "Notes on Brahman", Utrecht, 1950, p. 32—38.

⁶⁾ cf. 3,1,15: 5,6: 15,4: 62,3: 15: 4,18,8: 26,3: 41,2: 53,1: 54,3: 55,1: 5: 3,50,2: 7,60,8: 12: 8,64,9: cf. also 1,31,12: 89,1.

⁷⁾ cf. 6,11,6: 13,1: 16,31: 32: 18,14: 71,3: 10,137,5.

⁸⁾ cf. also 3,2,7: where Geldner translates "festhalten".

⁹⁾ cf. RV. 1,14,1: 6: 22,9: 23,2: 10: 48,12: 92,18: 3,47,3: 53,10: 4,25,4: 46,7: 47,1: 5,51,3: 8: 7,98,3: 8,35,3: 9,23,6: 10,200,1: (Val. 9).

¹⁰⁾ cf. J. McKenzie: "Hindu Ethics", London, 1922, and also E. W. Hopkins: "Ethics of India", New Haven, 1924; Farquhar: "Lectures on Comparative Religion", Oxford, 27, p. 66 ff.

¹¹⁾ cf. "The Bhagavad Gita", by Radhakrishnan, London, 1949, p. 136.

¹²⁾ cf. also 2,3,4: 41,13: 3,4,8: 9,6: 43,3: 5,26,4: 5: 9: 51,1: 6,15,16: 16,41: 6,52,7: 17: 7,14,1: 3: 82,8: 8,35,3: 6: 24: 10,110,4.

¹³⁾ cf. also 1,39,7: 142,3: 9: 161,6: 162,4: 183,3: 2,3,1: 41,21: 3,4,8: 4,120: 15,1: 54,2: 56,2: 5,26,4: 6,1,4: 48,21: 50,8: 52,13: 17: 7,39,6.

¹⁴⁾ M. Muusses, "Koerultus bij de Hindoes", Diss. Utrecht, 1922.

¹⁵⁾ cf. RV. 1,92,12: 5,80,3: 7,77,2: cf. also 1,124,5.

¹⁶⁾ cf. R.V. 1,133,3: 9,96,15: 10,11,1.

¹⁷⁾ H. von Glasenap, "Religionen Indiens", Stuttgart, 1943, p. 55.

¹⁸⁾ J. Gonda, "Inleiding tot het Indische Denken", Antwerpen—Nijmegen, 1948, p. 19.

¹⁹⁾ Masson-Oursel, "Ancient India and Indian civilization", London, 1934, p. 79.

²⁰⁾ H. Oldenberg, "Die Religion des Veda", 4th ed., Stuttgart, 1923, p. 284.

²¹⁾ cf. also 1,70,6: 71,3: 50,5: etc.

²²⁾ S. D. Atkins, "Pusan in the Rig Veda", Princeton, 1941, p. 29.

²³⁾ P. Thieme, "Studien zur Indogerm. Wortkunde und Religionsgesch.", Berlin, 1952.

²⁴⁾ in a conversation.

²⁵⁾ E. W. Hopkins, "Religions of India", p. 172.

²⁶⁾ "Inleiding tot het Ind. Denken", p. 60 vv.

²⁷⁾ cf. also 1,37,15: 44,6: 53,11: 73,5: 89,2: 8: 93,3: 94,16: 96,8: 116,10: 19: 25: 157,4: 2,32,1: 3,62,15: 4,12,6: 6,52,15: 7,77,5: 8,18,18: 22: 44,30: 8,48,4: 10: 79,6: 9,80,2: 96,14: 10,14,14: 18,2: 3: 36,14: 59,5: 62,11.

²⁸⁾ J. Gonda, "Maya". Tijdschrift voor Philosophie. Leuven, 1952; cf. also P. D. Devanandan, "The concept of Maya", London, 1953.

²⁹⁾ cf. also: 1,27,2: 143,1: 3,11,4: 28,3: 6,5,1: 6,1: 12,1.

³⁰⁾ Mounds in the Indus valley belonging to the ancient civilization show that the invaders burned the cities of a high culture.

³¹⁾ cf. also: 3,6,6: 9: 19,4: 5,26,1: 7,11,1.

³²⁾ cf. also 1,54,1: 57,5: 82,1: 3: 84,19: 102,3: 4: 7: 10: 103,2: 4: 104,5: 8: 132,1: 1,165,9: 171,3: 174,7: 178,5: and so through the entire RV.

³³⁾ cf. also: 1,31,3: 44,3: 45,10: 65,4: 79,5: 94,13: 127,1: 128,6: 143,1: 2,7,1: 3,6: 6,1,12: 16,18: 26: 48,9: 8,19,26: 28: 29: 10,8,4: 91,12.

cf. also 129,1: 30,1: 2,13,13: 4,32,14: 6,46,6: 7,31,3: 4: 8,1,6: 29: 2,1: 12,1,8: 10,38,2:
cf. also: 3,9,6: 4,1,1: 6,2: 6,5,3: 13,3: 7,4,4: 16,6: 17,5: 8,84,2: 10,79,4:
8,3,5: 87,9:

9: 4,5: 6,21,12: 47,8:
7,3: 28,5: 32,6: 52,4:

cf. A. A. Macdonell, in J.A.S. 1913.

cf. M. Müller in "Varuna und Mitra", in: Contributions to the science of Mythology, 2 (1897), p. 661—668.

cf. K. Rönnow: "Trita Apya", Uppsala, diss. 1927.

cf. also: 4,1,7: 2,18: 17,2: 22,4: 27,1: 6,63,5: 7,42,2: 60,3: 9,68,5: 83,4: 9,97,7: 10,3,5: 10,39,3:

cf. also: 6,11,3: 5,1,2: 12: 8,69,3: 9,108,8: 10,64,14:

cf. 1,11,4: 13,4,2: 5,1,11: 7,21,1: 9,8,5: 25,1: 62,20: 67,2: 16: 18:

cf. also: 1,7,2: 5: 7: 40,8: 52,5: 57,6: 63,4: 5: 7: 80,7: 11: 1,103,3: 109,8:
130,3: 131,6: 173,10: 2,16,6: 39,2: etc. etc.

NOTES TO CHAPTER II

cf. also 11,6,3: 14,1,49: 18,1,56: 4,31: 19,10,10: 24,1: 49,1:

In this context I should like to refer to Gonda's treatise "Utrava" in India Antiqua, p. 146 f., where the author proves the basic reason of Indian festivals to be magic "analogy" or magic "symbolism", demonstrating a primitive idea:
"Sacrifice is identical" Thamāh prapanchānta ātma prapancha ātma prapancha ātma Utrava",

cf. also: 2,12,5: 13,1: 16,4: 17,3: 18,1: 19,1—5: 20,1: 21,1: 23,1: 25,1: 3,15,7: 17,4: 4,23,1: 38,6: 7: 5,3,2: 4: 7: 9: 18,1,34: 3,28—28: 4,9: cf. also 7,84,1: and 10,6,1:

cf. also 7,9,2: 31,1: 84,1: 8,3,7: 12: 18: 5,14: 9,2,7: 13: 8,3,20: 10,1,21: 7,23:
11,1,3: 16,4,4: 16,1,34: 19,9,12: 16,1: 2: 17,1—10: 20,3: 55,1: 2: 7:

cf. also 1,7,1: 6: 8,4: 5,8,5: 10: 6,6,1: 2: 53,1: 66,1: 2: 67,2: 6,75,1: 2: 7,70,2: 8,3,4: 18: 9,2,14: 11,1,2: 13,1,3: 14,2,14: 19,66,1: and also 3,10,12: 4,32,3: 6,32,1:

"Ancient Indian Ojas" by Prof. J. Gonda, Utrecht, 1952, passim.

cf. also 3,1,9: 21,11: and with agratapā 3,17,3: 6,74,3: 118,1: (agratā) 8,8,6—8: 15,5,4: 17,1,1: 18,3,54: 19,24,7:

cf. also 1,3,3: 4,5: 4,16,2: 3,5: 5,19,10: 25,6: 6,20,2: 8,3,2: 7,83,1: 2: 9,2,6: 12,3,4: 11,6,3: 14,2,49: 15,2,17: 16,3: 18,4,70: 19,13,10: 26,4: 44,8:

cf. Seea Rothe, "Deliver us from evil". Studies on the vedic ideas of salvation, Lund 1946.

cf. also 2,29,3: 2: 3,3,3: 4: 11,4: 8: 6,5,2: 41,3: 78,3: 122,4: 55,6: 89,2: 103,1:
8,1,7: 11: 13: 18: 27—7: 9,1,35: 14,2,36: 39: 75: 19,12,1: 26,4: 30,2: 43,7: 61,1:
41,1: 64,6: 73,1:

NOTES TO CHAPTER I

- ¹⁾ RV. 2,38,10; 3,1,3; 4: 13: 3,2: 5: 4,1; 6,6: 13,1: 17,3: 20,3: 27,3: 33,6: 53,1; 54,17: 59,9: 4,8,3: 15,2: 30,24: 34,11: 47,1: 55,3: 5,2,11: 13,6: 17,1: 26,1: 29,9: 33,3: 42,17: 43,3: 45,1: 49,1: 2: 50,2: 5: 74,2: 81,1: 5: 82,1: 7: 6,16,7: 18,14: 47,28: 56,1: 73,2: 8,65,4: 83,1: 9,11,2: 7: 28,2: 80,4: 86,30: 106,6: 107,23: 109,21: 10,110,5: 159,5: 174,4: etc. etc.
- ²⁾ R.V. 1,44,11: 12: 3,2,8: 9,9: 5,21,3: 6,16,1.
- ³⁾ RV. 1,1,1: 76,2: 4: 5: 3,10,7: 13,1: 5,4,3: 21,1: 26,4: 6,16,2: 10.
- ⁴⁾ "Godsdienst der Primitieven", Roermond, 1949; cf. also M. Eliade, "Traité d'histoire des religions", Paris, 1949, § 37.
- ⁵⁾ J. Gonda, "Notes on Brahman", Utrecht, 1950, p. 32-38.
- ⁶⁾ cf. 3,1,15: 5,6: 15,4: 62,3: 15: 4,18,8: 26,3: 41,2: 53,1: 54,3: 55,1: 5: 5,50,2: 7,60,8: 12: 8,64,9: cf. also 1,31,12: 89,1.
- ⁷⁾ cf. 6,11,6: 13,1: 16,31: 32: 18,14: 71,3: 10,137,5.
- ⁸⁾ cf. also 3,2,7: where Geldner translates "festhalten".
- ⁹⁾ cf. RV. 1,14,1: 6: 22,9: 23,2: 10: 48,12: 92,18: 3,47,3: 53,10: 4,25,4: 46,7: 47,1: 5,51,3: 8: 7,98,3: 8,35,3: 9,23,6: 10,200,1: (Val. 9).
- ¹⁰⁾ cf. J. McKenzie, "Hindu Ethics", London, 1922, and also E. W. Hopkins, "Ethics of India", New Haven, 1924; Farquhar, "Lectures on Comparative Religion", Oxford, 11, p. 66 ff.
- ¹¹⁾ cf. "The Bhagavad Gita", by Radhakrishnan, London, 1949, p. 136.
- ¹²⁾ cf. also 2,3,4: 41,13: 3,4,8: 9,6: 43,3: 5,26,4: 5: 9: 51,1: 6,15,16: 16,41: 6,52,7: 17: 7,14,1: 3: 82,8: 8,35,3: 6: 24: 10,110,4.
- ¹³⁾ cf. also 1,39,7: 142,3: 9: 161,6: 162,4: 188,3: 2,3,1: 41,21: 3,4,8: 4,1,20: 15,1: 54,2: 56,2: 5,26,4: 6,1,4: 48,21: 50,8: 52,13: 17: 7,39,6.
- ¹⁴⁾ M. Muusses, "Koecultus bij de Hindoes", Diss. Utrecht, 1922.
- ¹⁵⁾ cf. RV. 1,92,12: 5,80,3: 7,77,2: cf. also 1,124,5.
- ¹⁶⁾ cf. R.V. 1,153,3: 9,96,15: 10,11,1.
- ¹⁷⁾ H. von Glasenap, "Religionen Indiens", Stuttgart, 1943, p. 55.
- ¹⁸⁾ J. Gonda, "Inleiding tot het Indische Denken", Antwerpen-Nijmegen, 1948, p. 19.
- ¹⁹⁾ Maçon-Oursel, "Ancient India and Indian civilization", London, 1934, p. 79.
- ²⁰⁾ H. Oldenberg, "Die Religion des Veda", 4th ed., Stuttgart, 1923, p. 284.
- ²¹⁾ cf. also 1,70,6: 71,3: 50,5: etc.
- ²²⁾ S. D. Atkins, "Pusan in the Rig Veda", Princeton, 1941, p. 29.
- ²³⁾ P. Thieme, "Studien zur Indogerm. Wortkunde und Religionsgesch.", Berlin, 1952.
- ²⁴⁾ In a conversation.
- ²⁵⁾ E. W. Hopkins, "Religions of India", p. 172.
- ²⁶⁾ "Inleiding tot het Ind. Denken", p. 63 vv.
- ²⁷⁾ cf. also 1,37,13: 44,6: 53,11: 73,3: 89,2: 8: 93,3: 94,16: 96,8: 116,10: 19: 25: 157,4: 2,32,1: 3,62,15: 4,12,6: 6,52,15: 7,77,5: 8,18,18: 22: 44,30: 8,48,4: 10: 79,6: 9,82,2: 96,14: 10,14,14: 18,2: 3: 36,14: 59,5: 62,11.
- ²⁸⁾ J. Gonda, "Maya". Tijdschrift voor Philosophie, Leuven, 1952; cf. also F. D. Devanandian, "The concept of Maya", London, 1952.
- ²⁹⁾ cf. also: 1,27,2: 143,1: 3,11,4: 28,3: 6,5,1: 6,1: 12,1.
- ³⁰⁾ Mounds in the Indus valley belonging to the ancient civilization show that the invaders burned the cities of a high culture.
- ³¹⁾ cf. also: 3,6,6: 9: 19,4: 5,26,1: 7,11,1.
- ³²⁾ cf. also 1,54,3: 57,3: 82,1: 3: 84,19: 102,3: 4: 7: 10: 103,2: 4: 104,5: 8: 132,1: 1,165,9: 171,3: 174,7: 178,3: and so through the entire RV.
- ³³⁾ cf. also: 1,31,3: 44,3: 45,10: 62,4: 79,5: 94,13: 127,1: 128,6: 143,1: 2,7,1: 5,6,1: 3,6: 6,1,12: 16,18: 26: 48,9: 8,19,26: 28: 29: 12,8,4: 91,12.

14) For further reference: V. Henry, "La magie dans l'Inde antique"; H. Zimmer, "Hindu Medicine", Zürich 1951; M. Bloomfield, "Atharvaveda", Strassbourg, 1899.

15) B. A. G. Vroklage SVD., "Godsdienst der Primitieven", Roermond, 1949, p. 298.

16) Leopold von Schröder, "Arische Religion", I, p. 393.

17) A. A. Macdonell, "Vedic Mythology", Strassbourg, 1897, p. 16.

18) George Dumézil, "Les dieux des Indo-Européens", Paris, 1952, p. 7-13.

19) Majumdar, Raychaudhuri, Kalikinkar Datta, "An advanced History of India", 2nd ed., London, 1950, p. 37.

20) H. Jacobi, "Die Religionen des Indus", Leipzig, 1897, p. 1.

21) M. Bloomfield

22) L. Barnett,

23) A. B. Keith, "Indian Mythology", Boston, 1932, p. 61.

24) H. Oldenberg, "Die Religion des Veda", Stuttgart, 1923, p. 39.

25) Arbman, "Rudra", Upsala, 1922, p. 149.

26) H. von Glasenapp, "Religionen Indiens", Stuttgart, 1943, p. 40.

27) S. Radhakrishnan, "Indian Philosophy", I, London, 1948, p. 72, 73.

NOTES TO CHAPTER III

1) cf. P. Br. 1,4,1; 5,4,6; 5,1; 7,1; 6,5,5; 7: 8: 10: 6,8; 7,5; 6: 7,2,1; 5,20; 9,16; 10,10; 9,2,3; 14,8,6; 9,10; etc.; cf. also J. Up. Br. 1,8,7; 52,1; 55,4; 58,8; 10: 59,12; 3,5,5; 20,1; 21,3; 26,5; 32,1; 6: 4,6,5; 7,3; 19,1.

2) P. Br. 2,6,2; 7,2; 12,2; 15,2; 3,2,2; 5,2; 4,2,2; 3,2; 7,4,2; 7: 7,17; 8,2,6; 3,5; 5,7; 8,13; 9,15; 9,2,9; 11,10,21; 12,12,10; 14,3,24; 5,17; 9,40; 15,3,36; 5,11; 11,5; 16,11,9; 12,7; 14,4; 17,1,1; 13,18; 20,1,3; 11,3; 21,8,2; 23,19,2; 25,1,3; 2,2; 16,2.

3) P. Br. 5,5,15; 8,4,6; 6,5; 6: 9,2; 15: 9,2,11; 11,5,9; 12,3,14; 9,21; 13,6,7; 16,2,2; 3: 3,2; 20,6,1c; 8,1c; 22,14,2; 5: J. Br. §§ 20: 23: 32: 34: 46: 47: 63: 78: 81: 96: 165: 191; J. Up. Br. 1,16,1; 60,1; etc. 2,3,4; 11: 8,4; 10,1.

4) P. Br. 18,6,4; 7,5; 19,13,4; 22,5,5; 8: 7,8; 11,3; 22,18,5; 23,6,2; 5: 25,5,2; 25,6,2; 9,2.

5) P. Br. 6,3,9; 7,8,14; 10,13; 15: 9,6,7; 10,2,1; 11,3,5; 15,8,2; 16,4,1; 5,23; 17,10,2; 20,4,5; 21,2,1; 22,5,3; 23,9,2; 24,1,2; 11,2; J. Br. §§ 9: 71: 133: 139: 166; J. Up. Br. 1,11,1; 1,24,3; 46,1.

6) P. Br. 12,1,4; 20,14,2; 7: (Vac); J. Br. §§ 8: 99: 141; J. Up. Br. 1,18,1; 24,4.

7) P. Br. 9,1,35; 15,5,35; 20,3,2; 21,1,10; J. Br. § 8: 41.

8) Prajapati created the hymns and metres: P. Br. 7,8,9-14; J. Br. § 25. He created the sacrifice: P. Br. 8,6,3; J. Br. § 103: 211. He created mankind: P. Br. 22,9,2; J. Br. § 8.

9) J. Mason SJ., "La religion populaire dans le canon Bouddhique Pali", Louvain 1942.

10) E. W. Hopkins, "Gods and Saints in the Great Brahmana". Trans. Conn. Acad. 13 (1908), p. 13 en 37.

11) H. Oldenberg, "Die Lehre der Upanissaden und die Anfänge des Buddhismus", Göttingen, 1923, p. 14.

NOTES TO CHAPTER IV

1) cf. Emile Senart, "Bṛhad Aranyaka Upaniṣad", Paris, 1934, p. 21.

S. Radhakrishnan, "The Principal Upaniṣads", London, 1953, p. 180: "As is this divinity (Hiranyagarbha) so is he. As all beings regard that divinity, so do all beings regard him who knows this". And Radhakrishnan gives an explanation: "Individuals suffer because one causes suffering to another, but in the Universal Spirit where all individuals are one, the sufferings of the individuals do not affect the whole".

8) "Indian Philosophy" by S. Radhakrishnan, London, 1948, I, p. 99—104.

9) cf. Smart, o.c., p. 12. Radhakrishnan, "The principal Upanisads", p. 168, gives a somewhat identical rendering: "I am Brahman. Therefore it became all. Even the gods cannot prevent his becoming thus, for he becomes their self"; cf. also Hume, "The thirteen principal Upanisads", Oxford, 1949: "Even the gods have no power to prevent his becoming thus, for he becomes their self", p. 84.

10) Maryla Falk, "Nama Rupa", Calcutta, 1943.

11) S. Radhakrishnan, "The Principal Upanisads", p. 277. Smart renders: "Les dieux le connaissent pour la lumière des lumières. Ils le connaissent pour la vie immortelle", p. 82 of his BAU.-edition.

12) Hume, o.c., p. 85: "So among the gods Brahma appeared by means of Agni".

13) Max Müller, "The Upanisads", Oxford, 1926, p. 90: "Among the devas that Brahmas existed as Agni (fire) only..."

14) Hume, o.c., p. 180, renders: "now with reference to the divinities". — Müller, o.c., p. 7: "now follows the meditation on the udgitha with reference to the gods". — Radhakrishnan, "The Principal Upanisads", p. 342: "now with reference to the divinities".

15) Hume, o.c., p. 92.

16) Radhakrishnan, o.c., p. 180: "As all beings regard that divinity, so do all beings regard him, who knows this", and then he renders our quotation: "As is this divinity (Hiranya-garbhā) so is he." — Max Müller, in SBE., vol. 40, p. 97, also inserts Hiranya-garbhā.

17) Hume, o.c., p. 216.

18) S. Rodhe, "Deliver us from evil", Lund, 1946, p. 170: "For the evil works that are mentioned now and then in the Upanisads the typical words for sin, masa with in the ritual texts: masa, agas, etc. are not used. In the Upanisads masa appears only when RV. 1,189,1: is quoted in BAU. 5,15,1: and in Isa Up. 18:.

19) Radhakrishnan, o.c., p. 172.

20) About masa cf. P. Thieme: "Studien zur Indogerm. Wortkunde u. Religionsgeschichte", Berlin, 1952.

21) cf. E. Smart, p. 49.

14) For further reference: V. Henry, "La magie dans l'Inde antique"; H. Zimmer, "Hindu Medicine", Zürich 1951; M. Bloomfield, "Atharvaveda", Strassbourg, 1899.

15) B. A. G. Vroklage SVD., "Godsdienst der Primitieven", Roermond, 1949, p. 298.

16) Leopold von Schröder, "Arische Religion", I, p. 393.

17) A. A. Macdonell, "Vedic Mythology", Strassbourg, 1897, p. 16.

18) George Dumézil, "Les dieux des Indo-Européens", Paris, 1952, p. 7-13.

19) Majumdar, Raychaudhuri, Kalikinkar Datta, "An advanced History of India", 2nd ed., London, 1950, p. 37.

20) H. Jacobi, "Die Entwicklung des Indischen Gottesbegriff", p. 1.

21) M. Bloomfield, "Religion of the Veda", New York, 1908, p. 151.

22) L. Barnett, "Hindu Gods and Heroes", London, 1922, p. 13.

23) A. B. Keith, "Indian Mythology", Boston, 1912, p. 61.

24) H. Oldenberg, "Die Religion des Veda", Stuttgart, 1923, p. 39.

25) Arbman, "Rudra", Upsala, 1922, p. 149.

26) H. von Glasenapp, "Religionen Indiens", Stuttgart, 1943, p. 40.

27) S. Radhakrishnan, "Indian Philosophy", I, London, 1948, p. 72, 73.

NOTES TO CHAPTER III

1) cf. P. Br. 1,4,1; 5,4,6; 5,1; 7,1; 6,5,5; 7; 8; 10; 6,8; 7,3; 6; 7,2,1; 5,20; 9,16; 10,10; 9,2,3; 14,8,6; 9,10; etc.; cf. also J. Up. Br. 1,8,7; 52,1; 55,4; 58,8; 10; 59,12; 3,5,5; 20,1; 21,3; 26,5; 32,1; 6; 4,6,5; 7,3; 19,1.

2) P. Br. 2,6,2; 7,2; 12,2; 15,2; 3,2,2; 5,2; 4,2,2; 3,2; 7,4,2; 7; 7,17; 8,2,6; 3,5; 5,7; 8,13; 9,15; 9,2,9; 11,10,21; 12,12,10; 14,3,24; 5,17; 9,40; 15,3,36; 5,11; 11,5; 16,11,9; 12,7; 14,4; 17,1,1; 13,18; 20,1,3; 11,3; 21,8,2; 23,19,2; 25,1,3; 2,2; 16,2.

3) P. Br. 5,5,15; 8,4,6; 6,5; 6; 9,2; 15; 9,2,11; 11,5,9; 12,3,14; 9,21; 13,6,7; 16,2,2; 3; 3,2; 20,6,1; 8,1; 22,14,2; 5; J. Br. §§ 20; 23; 32; 34; 46; 47; 63; 78; 81; 96; 165; 191; J. Up. Br. 1,16,1; 60,1; etc. 2,3,4; 11; 8,4; 10,1.

4) P. Br. 18,6,4; 7,5; 19,13,4; 22,5,5; 8; 7,8; 11,3; 22,18,5; 23,6,2; 5; 25,3,2; 25,6,2; 9,2.

5) P. Br. 6,3,9; 7,8,14; 10,13; 15; 9,6,7; 10,2,1; 11,3,5; 15,8,2; 16,4,1; 5,23; 17,10,2; 20,4,5; 21,2,1; 22,5,3; 23,9,2; 24,1,2; 11,2; J. Br. §§ 9; 71; 133; 139; 166; J. Up. Br. 1,11,1; 1,24,3; 46,1.

6) P. Br. 12,1,4; 20,14,2; 7; (Vac); J. Br. §§ 8; 99; 141; J. Up. Br. 1,18,1; 24,4.

7) P. Br. 9,1,35; 15,5,35; 20,3,2; 21,1,10; J. Br. § 8; 41.

8) Prajapati created the hymns and metres: P. Br. 7,8,9-14; J. Br. § 25. He created the sacrifices: P. Br. 8,6,3; J. Br. § 108; 211. He created mankind: P. Br. 22,9,2; J. Br. § 8.

9) J. Masson SJ., "La religion populaire dans le canon Bouddhique Pali", Louvain 1942.

10) E. W. Hopkins, "Gods and Saints in the Great Brahmana", Trans. Conn. Acad. III (1908), p. 23 en 37.

11) H. Oldenberg, "Die Lehre der Upanisaden und die Anfänge des Buddhismus", Göttingen, 1923, p. 14.

NOTES TO CHAPTER IV

1) cf. Emile Senart, "Bṛhad Aranyaka Upaniṣad", Paris, 1934, p. 21.

S. Radhakrishnan, "The Principal Upaniṣads", London, 1953, p. 183: "As in this divinity (Uṣiranyagarbha) so is he. As all beings regard that divinity, so do all beings regard him who knows this". And Radhakrishnan gives an explanation: "Individuals suffer because one causes suffering to another, but in the Universal Spirit where all individuals are one, the sufferings of the individuals do not affect the whole".

8) "Indian Philosophy" by S. Radhakrishnan, London, 1948, I, p. 99—104.

9) cf. Smart, o.c., p. 12. Radhakrishnan, "The principal Upanisads", p. 168, gives a somewhat identical rendering: "I am Brahman. Therefore it became all. Even the gods cannot prevent his becoming thus, for he becomes their self"; cf. also Hume, "The thirteen principal Upanisads", Oxford, 1949: "Even the gods have no power to prevent his becoming thus, for he becomes their self", p. 84.

10) Maryla Falk, "Nama Rupa", Calcutta, 1943.

11) S. Radhakrishnan, "The Principal Upanisads", p. 277. Smart renders: "Les d'eux le connaissent pour la lumière des lumières. Ils le connaissent pour la vie immortelle", p. 82 of his BAU-edition.

12) Hume, o.c., p. 85: "So amongst the gods Brahma appeared by means of Agni".

13) Max Müller, "The Upanisads", Oxford, 1926, p. 90: "Among the devas that Brahman existed as Agni (fire) only..."

14) Hume, o.c., p. 180, renders: "now with reference to the divinities". — Müller, o.c., p. 7: "now follows the meditation on the udgitha with reference to the gods". — Radhakrishnan, "The Principal Upanisads", p. 342: "now with reference to the divinities".

15) Hume, o.c., p. 90.

16) Radhakrishnan, o.c., p. 180: "As all beings regard that divinity, so do all beings regard him, who knows this", and then he renders our quotation: "As is this divinity (Hiranya-garbha) so is he." — Max Müller, in SBE., vol. 40, p. 97, also inserts Hiranya-garbha.

17) Hume, o.c., p. 216.

18) S. Rodhe, "Deliver us from evil", Lund, 1946, p. 170: "For the evil works that are mentioned now and then in the Upanisads the typical words for sin, met with in the ritual texts: enas, agas, etc. are not used. In the Upanisads enas appears only when RV. 1,119,1 is quoted in BAU. 3,15,1; and in Isa Up. 18:.

19) Radhakrishnan, o.c., p. 172.

20) About amra cf. P. Thieme: "Studien zur Indogerm. Wortkunde u. Religionsgeschichte", Berlin, 1932.

21) cf. E. Smart, p. 49.

¹⁴⁾ For further reference: V. Henry, "La magie dans l'Inde antique"; H. Zimmer, "Hindu Medicine", Zürich 1951; M. Bloomfield, "Atharvaveda", Strassbourg, 1899.

¹⁵⁾ B. A. G. Vroklage SVD., "Goddienst der Primitieven", Roermond, 1949, p. 298.

¹⁶⁾ Leopold von Schröder, "Arische Religion", I, p. 393.

¹⁷⁾ A. A. Macdonell, "Vedic Mythology", Strassbourg, 1897, p. 16.

¹⁸⁾ George Dumézil, "Les dieux des Indo-Européens", Paris, 1952, p. 7-13.

¹⁹⁾ Majumdar, Raychaudhuri, Kalikinkar Datta, "An advanced History of India", 2nd ed., London, 1950, p. 37.

²⁰⁾ H. Jacobi, "Die Entwicklung des Indischen Gottesbegriff", p. 1.

²¹⁾ M. Bloomfield, "Religion of the Veda", New York, 1908, p. 151.

²²⁾ L. Barnett, "Hindu Gods and Heroes", London, 1922, p. 13.

²³⁾ A. B. Keith, "Indian Mythology", Boston, 1932, p. 61.

²⁴⁾ H. Oldenberg, "Die Religion des Veda", Stuttgart, 1923, p. 39.

²⁵⁾ Arbman, "Rudra", Upsala, 1922, p. 149.

²⁶⁾ H. von Glasenapp, "Religionen Indiens", Stuttgart, 1943, p. 40.

²⁷⁾ S. Radhakrishnan, "Indian Philosophy", I, London, 1948, p. 72, 73.

NOTES TO CHAPTER III

¹⁾ cf. P. Br. 1,4,1; 5,4,6; 5,1; 7,1; 6,5,5; 7; 8; 10; 6,8; 7,5; 6; 7,2,1; 5,20; 9,16; 10,10; 9,2,3; 14,8,6; 9,10; etc.; cf. also J. Up. Br. 1,8,7; 52,1; 55,4; 58,8; 10; 59,12; 3,5,5; 20,1; 21,3; 26,5; 32,1; 6; 4,6,5; 7,3; 19,1.

²⁾ P. Br. 2,6,2; 7,2; 12,2; 15,2; 3,2,2; 5,2; 4,2,2; 3,2; 7,4,2; 7; 7,17; 8,2,6; 3,5; 5,7; 8,13; 9,15; 9,2,9; 11,10,21; 12,12,10; 14,3,24; 5,17; 9,40; 15,3,36; 5,11; 11,5; 16,11,9; 12,7; 14,4; 17,1,1; 13,18; 20,1,3; 11,3; 21,8,2; 23,19,2; 25,1,3; 2,2; 16,2.

³⁾ P. Br. 5,5,15; 8,4,6; 6,5; 6; 9,2; 15; 9,2,11; 11,5,9; 12,3,14; 9,21; 13,6,7; 16,2,2; 3; 3,2; 20,6,1; 8,1; 22,14,2; 5; J. Br. §§ 20; 23; 32; 34; 46; 47; 63; 78; 81; 96; 165; 191; J. Up. Br. 1,16,1; 60,1; etc. 2,3,4; 11; 8,4; 10,1.

⁴⁾ P. Br. 18,6,4; 7,5; 19,13,4; 22,5,5; 8; 7,8; 11,3; 22,18,5; 23,6,2; 5; 25,5,2; 25,6,2; 9,2.

⁵⁾ P. Br. 6,3,9; 7,8,14; 10,13; 15; 9,6,7; 10,2,1; 11,3,5; 15,8,2; 16,4,1; 5,23; 17,10,2; 20,4,5; 21,2,1; 22,5,3; 23,9,2; 24,1,2; 11,2; J. Br. §§ 9; 71; 133; 139; 166; J. Up. Br. 1,11,1; 1,24,3; 46,1.

⁶⁾ P. Br. 12,1,4; 20,14,2; 7; (Vac); J. Br. §§ 8; 99; 141; J. Up. Br. 1,18,1; 24,4.

⁷⁾ P. Br. 9,1,35; 15,5,35; 20,3,2; 21,1,10; J. Br. § 8; 41.

⁸⁾ Prajapati created the hymns and metres: P. Br. 7,8,9-14; J. Br. § 25. He created the sacrifices: P. Br. 8,6,3; J. Br. § 108; 211. He created mankind: P. Br. 22,9,2; J. Br. § 8.

⁹⁾ J. Manon SJ., "La religion populaire dans le canon Bouddhique Pali", Louvain 1942.

¹⁰⁾ E. W. Hopkins, "Gods and Saints in the Great Brahmana". Trans. Conn. Acad. II (1908), p. 23 en 37.

¹¹⁾ H. Oldenberg, "Die Lehre der Upanisaden und die Anfänge des Buddhismus", Göttingen, 1923, p. 14.

NOTES TO CHAPTER IV

¹⁾ cf. Emile Senart, "Brhad Aranyaka Upanisad", Paris, 1934, p. 21.

S. Radhakrishnan, "The Principal Upanisads", London, 1953, p. 182: "As is this divinity (Hiranyagarbha) so is he. As all beings regard that divinity, so do all beings regard him who knows this". And Radhakrishnan gives an explanation: "Individuals suffer because one causes suffering to another, but in the Universal Spirit where all individuals are one, the sufferings of the individuals do not affect the whole".

- Der Rigveda. Göttingen, 1923, vol. I.
- Der Rigveda. Cambridge (Mass.), 1951, 3 vol.
- H. von Glasenapp*, Religionen Indiens. Stuttgart, 1943.
- Entwicklungsstufen des indischen Denkens, Halle, 1940.
- J. Gonda*, Ancient Indian Ojas. Utrecht, 1952.
- Het Boeddhisme. Den Haag, 1943.
- Inleiding tot het Indische Denken. Nijmegen—Antwerpen, 1948.
- Māyā, in: Tijdschrift voor Philosophie. Leuven, 1952.
- Notes on Brahman. Utrecht, 1950.
- Remarks on the Sanskrit Passive. Leiden, 1951.
- Uttara, in: India Antiqua. Festschrift Vogel. Leiden, 1947.
- De Vedische Godsdienst. Den Haag, 1943.
- Aspects of early Viṣṇuism. Utrecht, 1954.
- H. Grassmann*, Wörterbuch zum Rigveda. Leipzig, 1873.
- E. Hardy*, Die vedische-brahmanische Periode. Münster in W., 1893.
- V. Henry*, La magie dans l'Inde Antique. Paris, 1904.
- Hastings' Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics*, vol. 12.
- A. Hillebrandt*, Vedische Mythologie. 3 Bde. Breslau 1927—1929.
- E. W. Hopkins*, Epic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Ir. Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1b. Strassburg, 1896.
- Gods and Saints of the great Brāhmaṇa, in: Transactions of the Conn. Acad. of Arts and Science, vol. 15, 1909.
- Ethics of India. New Haven, 1924.
- The Religions of India. London, 1895.
- H. Jacobi*, Entwicklung der Gottesidee bei den Indern. Bonn, 1923.
- A. B. Keith*, Indian Mythology. Boston, 1932.
- The Age of the Rigveda. Cambridge, 1922.
- F. König*, Christus und die Religionen der Erde. 3 Bde. Wien, 1951.
- F. B. J. Kuiper*, De Goddelijke Moeder in de Voorindische Religie. Rede. Groningen, 1939.
- Bh. Kumarappa*, The Hindu conception of the deity. London, 1934.
- H. Lüders*, Varuna I. Göttingen, 1951.
- A. A. Macdonell*, Vedic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1a. Strassburg, 1896.
- Lectures on comparative Religion. London, 1925.
- Nicol Matricol*, Indian Theism. London, 1919.
- T. M. P. Mahadevan*, The Philosophy of Advaita. London, 1933.
- Gauḍapāda. Madras, 1952.
- L. S. S. O'Malley*, Popular Hinduism. The religion of the masses. Cambridge, 1935.
- J. MacKenzie*, Hindu Ethics. London, 1922.
- Majumdar, Raychanduri, Datta*, An advanced History of India. London, 1950.
- G. P. Malalasekera*, Dictionary of Pali proper names. London, 1938.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. VEDIC TEXTS

- Atharvaveda Samhitā, edited by R. Roth and W. D. Whitney, Berlin 1856; 2nd edition by M. Lindenau, Berlin 1924.
 Bṛhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara. Anandasrama Saṃskrit series 15. Poona 1891.
 Bṛhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad, text and translation by Emile Senart.
 Chāndogya Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara. Anandasrama Saṃskrit series 14, Poona 1890.
 Rīgveda samhitā by A. Aufrecht. Berlin 1863.
 Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, ed. by A. Weber. The White Yajurveda II. Berlin 1855 (1924).
 Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.
 Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, translation by Dr. W. Caland, Calcutta 1931.
 Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa in Auswahl by W. Caland, Amsterdam 1919.

II. MODERN AUTHORS

- E. Arhman, Rudra. Untersuchungen zum altindischen Glauben und Kultus. Upsala, 1922.
 S. D. Atkins, Pūṣan in the Rīgveda. Princeton, 1941.
 L. Barnett, Hindu Gods and Heroes. London, 1922.
 K. L. Bellon, Inleiding tot de natuurlijke godsdienstwetenschap. Antwerpen—Nijmegen, 3e uitg., 1948.
 A. Bergaigne, La Religion Védique d'après les Hymnes du Rīgveda. 3 vol. Paris 1878—1883.
 A. Bertholet, Religionsgeschichtliches Lesebuch. Tübingen, 1908.
 M. Bloomfield, Rīgveda repetitions. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
 — Atharvaveda. Grundriss der indo-arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde 2, 1b. Strassburg, 1899.
 — Atharvaveda. Hymns of the Atharvaveda. S.B.E., vol 42. Oxford 1897.
 — The religion of the Veda. New York, 1908.
 — A Vedic concordance. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
 G. H. Th. Buschan, Illustrierte Völkerkunde. 3 vol., 1922—26.
 P. von Bradke, Dyaus Asura, Ahura Mazda und die Asura. 1855.
 R. N. Dandekar, Der vedische Mensch. Indogerm. Bibl. III, 16. Heidelberg, 1938.
 P. D. Devanandan, The Concept of Māyā. London, 1950.
 G. Dumézil, Mitra Varuṇa. Essai sur deux représentations indo-européennes de la Souveraineté. Paris, 1948.
 — Les dieux des Indo-Européens. Paris, 1952.
 M. Falk, Nāmarūpa and Dharmarūpa. Calcutta, 1943.
 J. N. Farquhar, Outline of the religious literature of India. Oxford, 1920.
 K. F. Geldner, Vedische Studien. 3 Bde.

- Der Rigveda. Göttingen, 1923, vol. I.
- Der Rigveda. Cambridge (Mass.), 1951, 3 vol.
- H. von Glasenapp*, Religionen Indiens. Stuttgart, 1943.
- Entwicklungsstufen des indischen Denkens, Halle, 1940.
- J. Gonda*, Ancient Indian Ojas. Utrecht, 1952.
- Het Boeddhisme. Den Haag, 1943.
- Inleiding tot het Indische Denken. Nijmegen—Antwerpen, 1948.
- Māyā, in: Tijdschrift voor Philosophie. Leuven, 1952.
- Notes on Brahman. Utrecht, 1950.
- Remarks on the Sanskrit Passive. Leiden, 1951.
- Utsava, in: India Antiqua. Festschrift Vogel. Leiden, 1947.
- De Vedische Godsdienst. Den Haag, 1943.
- Aspects of early Vismism. Utrecht, 1954.
- H. Grassmann*, Wörterbuch zum Rigveda. Leipzig, 1873.
- E. Hardy*, Die vedische-brahmanische Periode. Münster in W., 1893.
- V. Henry*, La magie dans l'Inde Antique. Paris, 1904.
- Hastings' Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics*, vol. 12.
- A. Hillebrandt*, Vedische Mythologie. 3 Bde. Breslau 1927—1929.
- E. W. Hopkins*, Epic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Ir. Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1b. Strassburg, 1896.
- Gods and Saints of the great Brāhmaṇa, in: Transactions of the Conn. Acad. of Arts and Science, vol. 15, 1909.
- Ethics of India. New Haven, 1924.
- The Religions of India. London, 1895.
- H. Jacobi*, Entwicklung der Gottesidee bei den Indern. Bonn, 1923.
- A. B. Keith*, Indian Mythology. Boston, 1932.
- The Age of the Rigveda. Cambridge, 1922.
- F. König*, Christus und die Religionen der Erde. 3 Bde. Wien, 1951.
- F. B. J. Kuiper*, De Goddelijke Moeder in de Voorindische Religie. Rede. Groningen, 1939.
- Bh. Kumarappa*, The Hindu conception of the deity. London, 1934.
- H. Lüders*, Varuna I. Göttingen, 1951.
- A. A. Macdonell*, Vedic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1a. Strassburg, 1896.
- Lectures on comparative Religion. London, 1925.
- Nicol Macnicol*, Indian Theism. London, 1919.
- T. M. P. Mahadevan*, The Philosophy of Advaita. London, 1938.
- Gauḍapāda. Madras, 1952.
- L. S. S. O'Malley*, Popular Hinduism. The religion of the masses. Cambridge, 1935.
- J. MacKenzie*, Hindu Ethics. London, 1922.
- Mapamdar, Raychandhuri, Datta*, An advanced History of India. London, 1950.
- G. P. Melalanchera*, Dictionary of Pali proper names. London, 1938.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. VEDIC TEXTS

- Atharvaveda Samhitā, edited by R. Roth and W. D. Whitney, Berlin 1856; 2nd edition by M. Lindenau, Berlin 1924.
 Bṛhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara. Anandasrama Saṃskrit series 15. Poona 1891.
 Bṛhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad, text and translation by Emile Senart.
 Chāndogya Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara. Anandasrama Saṃskrit series 14, Poona 1890.
 Rīgveda samhitā by A. Aufrecht. Berlin 1863.
 Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, ed. by A. Weber. The White Yajurveda II. Berlin 1855 (1924).
 Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.
 Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, translation by Dr. W. Caland, Calcutta 1931.
 Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa in Auswahl by W. Caland, Amsterdam 1919.

II. MODERN AUTHORS

- E. Arberman, Rudra. Untersuchungen zum altindischen Glauben und Kultus. Upsala, 1922.
 S. D. Atkins, Pūṣan in the Rīgveda. Princeton, 1941.
 L. Barnett, Hindu Gods and Heroes. London, 1922.
 K. L. Bellon, Inleiding tot de natuurlijke godsdienstwetenschap. Antwerpen—Nijmegen, 3e uitg., 1948.
 A. Bergaigne, La Religion Védique d'après les Hymnes du Rīgveda. 3 vol. Paris 1878—1883.
 A. Bertholet, Religionsgeschichtliches Lesebuch. Tübingen, 1908.
 M. Bloomfield, Rīgveda repetitions. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
 — Atharvaveda. Grundriss der indo-arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde 2, 1b. Strassburg, 1899.
 — Atharvaveda. Hymns of the Atharvaveda. S.B.E., vol 42. Oxford 1897.
 — The religion of the Veda. New York, 1908.
 — A Vedic concordance. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
 G. H. Th. Buschan, Illustrierte Völkerkunde. 3 vol., 1922—26.
 P. von Bradke, Dyaus Asura, Ahura Mazda und die Asura. 1855.
 R. N. Dandekar, Der vedische Mensch. Indogerm. Bibl. III, 16. Heidelberg, 1938.
 P. D. Devanandan, The Concept of Māyā. London, 1950.
 G. Dumézil, Mitra Varuṇa. Essai sur deux représentations indo-européennes. Paris, 1948.
 1952.
 Calcutta, 1943.
 literature of India. Oxford, 1920.
 K. F. Geldner, Vedische Studien. 3 Bde.

- Der Rigveda. Göttingen, 1923, vol. I.
- Der Rigveda. Cambridge (Mass.), 1951, 3 vol.
- H. von Glasenapp*, Religionen Indiens. Stuttgart, 1943.
- Entwicklungsrufen des indischen Denkens, Halle, 1940.
- J. Gonda*, Ancient Indian Ojas. Utrecht, 1952.
- Het Boeddhisme. Den Haag, 1943.
- Inleiding tot het Indische Denken. Nijmegen—Antwerpen, 1948.
- Mâyā, in: Tijdschrift voor Philosophie. Leuven, 1952.
- Notes on Brahman. Utrecht, 1950.
- Remarks on the Sanskrit Passive. Leiden, 1951.
- Utsava, in: India Antiqua. Festschrift Vogel. Leiden, 1947.
- De Vedische Godsdienst. Den Haag, 1943.
- Aspects of early Vismism. Utrecht, 1954.
- H. Grassmann*, Wörterbuch zum Rigveda. Leipzig, 1873.
- E. Hardy*, Die vedische-brahmanische Periode. Münster in W., 1893.
- V. Henry*, La magie dans l'Inde Antique. Paris, 1904.
- Hastings' Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics*, vol. 12.
- A. Hillebrandt*, Vedische Mythologie. 3 Bde. Breslau 1927—1929.
- E. W. Hopkins*, Epic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Ir. Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Hest 1b. Strassburg, 1896.
- Gods and Saints of the great Brāhmana, in: Transactions of the Conn. Acad. of Arts and Science, vol. 15, 1909.
- Ethics of India. New Haven, 1924.
- The Religions of India. London, 1895.
- H. Jacobi*, Entwicklung der Gottesidee bei den Indern. Bonn, 1923.
- A. B. Keith*, Indian Mythology. Boston, 1932.
- The Age of the Rigveda. Cambridge, 1922.
- F. König*, Christus und die Religionen der Erde. 3 Bde. Wien, 1951.
- F. B. J. Kuiper*, De Goddelijke Moeder in de Voorindische Religie. Rede. Groningen, 1939.
- Bh. Kumarappa*, The Hindu conception of the deity. London, 1934.
- H. Lüderi*, Varuna I. Göttingen, 1951.
- A. A. Macdonell*, Vedic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Hest 1a. Strassburg, 1896.
- Lectures on comparative Religion. London, 1925.
- Nicol Macnicol*, Indian Theism. London, 1919.
- T. M. P. Mahadevan*, The Philosophy of Advaita. London, 1938.
- Gauḍapāda. Madras, 1952.
- L. S. S. O'Malley*, Popular Hinduism. The religion of the masses. Cambridge, 1935.
- J. MacKenzie*, Hindu Ethics. London, 1922.
- Majumdar, Raychanduri, Datta*, An advanced History of India. London, 1950.
- G. P. Malalasekera*, Dictionary of Pali proper names. London, 1938.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. VEDIC TEXTS

- Atharvaveda Samhitā, edited by R. Roth and W. D. Whitney, Berlin 1856; 2nd edition by M. Lindzenau, Berlin 1924.
- Bṛhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara. Anandasrama Saṃskṛit series 15, Poona 1891.
- Bṛhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad, text and translation by Emile Senart.
- Chāndogya Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara. Anandasrama Saṃskṛit series 14, Poona 1890.
- Rigveda samhitā by A. Aufrecht. Berlin 1863.
- Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, ed. by A. Weber. The White Yajurveda II. Berlin 1855 (1924).
- Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.
- Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, translation by Dr. W. Caland, Calcutta 1931.
- Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa in Auswahl by W. Caland, Amsterdam 1919.

II. MODERN AUTHORS

- E. Arberman, Rudra. Untersuchungen zum altindischen Glauben und Kultus. Upsala, 1922.
- S. D. Atkins, Pūṣan in the Rigveda. Princeton, 1941.
- L. Barnett, Hindu Gods and Heroes. London, 1922.
- K. L. Bellon, Inleiding tot de natuurlijke godsdienstwetenschap. Antwerpen—Nijmegen, 3e uitg., 1948.
- A. Bergaigne, La Religion Védique d'après les Hymnes du Rigveda. 3 vol. Paris 1878—1883.
- A. Bertholet, Religionsgeschichtliches Lesebuch. Tübingen, 1908.
- M. Bloomfield, Rigveda repetitions. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
- Atharvaveda. Grundriss der indo-arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde 2, 1b. Strassburg, 1899.
- Atharvaveda. Hymns of the Atharvaveda. S.B.E., vol 42. Oxford 1897.
- The religion of the Veda. New York, 1908.
- A Vedic concordance. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
- G. H. Th. Buschan, Illustrierte Völkerkunde. 3 vol., 1922—26.
- P. von Bradke, Dyaus Asura, Ahura Mazda und die Aúra. 1855.
- R. N. Dandekar, Der vedische Mensch. Indogerm. Bibl. III, 16. Heidelberg, 1938.
- P. D. Devanandan, The Concept of Māyā. London, 1930.
- G. Dumézil, Mitra Varuṇa. Essai sur deux représentations indo-européennes de la Souveraineté. Paris, 1948.
- Les dieux des Indo-Européens. Paris, 1952.
- M. Falk, Nāmarūpa and Dharmarūpa. Calcutta, 1943.
- J. N. Farquhar, Outline of the religious literature of India. Oxford, 1920.
- K. F. Geldner, Vedische Studien. 3 Bde.

- Der Rigveda. Göttingen, 1923, vol. I.
- Der Rigveda. Cambridge (Mass.), 1951, 3 vol.
- H. von Glasenapp, Religionen Indiens. Stuttgart, 1943.
- Entwicklungsstufen des indischen Denkens, Halle, 1940.
- J. Gonda, Ancient Indian Ojas. Utrecht, 1952.
- Het Boeddhisme. Den Haag, 1943.
- Inleiding tot het Indische Denken. Nijmegen—Antwerpen, 1948.
- Māyā, in: Tijdschrift voor Philosophie. Leuven, 1952.
- Notes on Brahman. Utrecht, 1950.
- Remarks on the Sanskrit Passive. Leiden, 1951.
- Utsava, in: India Antiqua. Festschrift Vogel. Leiden, 1947.
- De Vedische Godsdienst. Den Haag, 1943.
- Aspects of early Viṣṇuism. Utrecht, 1954.
- H. Grassmann, Wörterbuch zum Rigveda. Leipzig, 1873.
- E. Hardy, Die vedische-brahmanische Periode. Münster in W., 1893.
- V. Henry, La magie dans l'Inde Antique. Paris, 1904.
- Hastings' Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, vol. 12.
- A. Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie. 3 Bde. Breslau 1927—1929.
- E. W. Hopkins, Epic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Ir. Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1b. Strassburg, 1896.
- Gods and Saints of the great Brāhmaṇa, in: Transactions of the Conn. Acad. of Arts and Science, vol. 15, 1909.
- Ethics of India. New Haven, 1924.
- The Religions of India. London, 1895.
- H. Jacobi, Entwicklung der Gottesidee bei den Indern. Bonn, 1923.
- A. B. Keith, Indian Mythology. Boston, 1932.
- The Age of the Rigveda. Cambridge, 1922.
- F. Kónig, Christus und die Religionen der Erde. 3 Bde. Wien, 1951.
- F. B. J. Kuiper, De Goddelijke Moeder in de Voorindische Religie. Rode. Groningen, 1939.
- Bh. Kumarappa, The Hindu conception of the deity. London, 1934.
- H. Lüders, Varuna I. Göttingen, 1951.
- A. A. Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1a. Strassburg, 1896.
- Lectures on comparative Religion. London, 1925.
- Nicol Macnicol, Indian Theism. London, 1919.
- T. M. P. Mahadevan, The Philosophy of Advaita. London, 1938.
- Gauḍapāda. Madras, 1952.
- L. S. S. O'Malley, Popular Hinduism. The religion of the masses. Cambridge, 1935.
- J. MacKenzie, Hindu Ethics. London, 1922.
- Majumdar, Raychauduri, Datta, An advanced History of India. London, 1950.
- G. P. Malalasekera, Dictionary of Pali proper names. London, 1938.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. VEDIC TEXTS

- Atharvaveda Samhitā, edited by R. Roth and W. D. Whitney, Berlin 1856; 2nd edition by M. Lindenau, Berlin 1924.
 Bṛhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara, Anandasrama Saṃskrit series 15, Poona 1891.
 Bṛhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad, text and translation by Emile Senart.
 Chāndogya Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara, Anandasrama Saṃskrit series 14, Poona 1890.
 Rīgveda samhitā by A. Aufrecht, Berlin 1863.
 Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, ed. by A. Weber. The White Yajurveda II. Berlin 1855 (1924).
 Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.
 Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, translation by Dr. W. Caland, Calcutta 1931.
 Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa in Auswahl by W. Caland, Amsterdam 1919.

II. MODERN AUTHORS

- E. Arhman, Rudra. Untersuchungen zum altindischen Glauben und Kultus. Upsala, 1922.
 S. D. Atkins, Pūṣan in the Rīgveda. Princeton, 1941.
 L. Barnett, Hindu Gods and Heroes. London, 1922.
 ———, Die vedische Wissenschaft. Antiquitates du Rīgveda. 3 vol. Paris 1878—1883.
 A. Bertholet, Religionsgeschichtliches Lesebuch. Tübingen, 1908.
 M. Bloomfield, Rīgveda repetitions. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
 — Atharvaveda. Grundriss der indo-arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde 2, 1b. Strassburg, 1899.
 — Atharvaveda. Hymns of the Atharvaveda. S.B.E., vol 42. Oxford 1897.
 — The religion of the Veda. New York, 1928.
 — A Vedic concordance. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
 G. H. Th. Buchan, Illustrierte Völkerkunde. 3 vol., 1922—26.
 P. von Bradke, Dyaus Asura, Ahura Mazda und die Asura. 1855.
 R. N. Dandekar, Der vedische Mensch. Indogerm. Bibl. III, 16. Heidelberg, 1938.
 P. D. Devanandan, The Concept of Māyā. London, 1950.
 G. Dumézil, Mitra Varuṇa. Essai sur deux représentations indo-européennes de la Souveraineté. Paris, 1948.
 — Les dieux des Indo-Européens. Paris, 1952.
 M. Falk, Nāmarūpa and Dharmarūpa. Calcutta, 1943.
 J. N. Farquhar, Outline of the religious literature of India. Oxford, 1920.
 E. F. Geldner, Vedische Studien. 3 Bde.

- Der Rigveda. Göttingen, 1923, vol. I.
- Der Rigveda. Cambridge (Mass.), 1951, 3 vol.
- H. von Glasenapp, Religionen Indiens. Stuttgart, 1943.
- Entwicklungsstufen des indischen Denkens, Halle, 1940.
- J. Gonda, Ancient Indian Ojas. Utrecht, 1952.
- Het Boeddhisme. Den Haag, 1943.
- Inleiding tot het Indische Denken. Nijmegen—Antwerpen, 1948.
- Māyā, in: Tijdschrift voor Philosophie. Leuven, 1952.
- Notes on Brahman. Utrecht, 1950.
- Remarks on the Sanskrit Passive. Leiden, 1951.
- Unava, in: India Antiqua. Festschrift Vogel. Leiden, 1947.
- De Vedische Godsdienst. Den Haag, 1943.
- Aspects of early Viṣṇuism. Utrecht, 1954.
- H. Grassmann, Wörterbuch zum Rigveda. Leipzig, 1873.
- E. Hardy, Die vedische-brahmanische Periode. Münster in W., 1893.
- V. Henry, La magie dans l'Inde Antique. Paris, 1904.
- Hastings' Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, vol. 12.
- A. Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie. 3 Bde. Breslau 1927—1929.
- E. W. Hopkins, Epic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Ir. Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1b. Strassburg, 1896.
- Gods and Saints of the great Brāhmaṇa, in: Transactions of the Conn. Acad. of Arts and Science, vol. 15, 1909.
- Ethics of India. New Haven, 1924.
- The Religions of India. London, 1895.
- H. Jacobi, Entwicklung der Gottesidee bei den Indern. Bonn, 1923.
- A. B. Keith, Indian Mythology. Boston, 1932.
- The Age of the Rigveda. Cambridge, 1922.
- F. König, Christus und die Religionen der Erde. 3 Bde. Wien, 1951.
- F. B. J. Kuiper, De Goddelijke Moeder in de Voorindische Religie. Rede. Groningen, 1939.
- Bh. Kumarappa, The Hindu conception of the deity. London, 1934.
- H. Lüders, Varuna I. Göttingen, 1951.
- A. A. Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1a. Strassburg, 1896.
- Lectures on comparative Religion. London, 1925.
- Nicol Macnicol, Indian Theism. London, 1919.
- T. M. P. Mahadevan, The Philosophy of Advaita. London, 1938.
- Gauḍapāda. Madras, 1952.
- I. S. S. O'Malley, Popular Hinduism. The religion of the masses. Cambridge, 1935.
- J. MacKenzie, Hindu Ethics. London, 1922.
- Mayumdar, Raychauduri, Datta, An advanced History of India. London, 1950.
- G. P. Malalasekera, Dictionary of Pali proper names. London, 1938.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. VEDIC TEXTS

- Atharvaveda Saṃhitā, edited by R. Roth and W. D. Whitney, Berlin 1856; 2nd edition by M. Lindenau, Berlin 1924.
 Brhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara. Anandasrama Saṃskṛit series 15, Poona 1891.
 Brhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad, text and translation by Emile Senart.
 Chāndogya Upaniṣad with the bhāṣya of Saṃkara. Anandasrama Saṃskṛit series 14, Poona 1890.
 Rīgveda saṃhitā by A. Aufrecht. Berlin 1863.
 Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, ed. by A. Weber. The White Yajurveda II. Berlin 1855 (1924).
 Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.
 Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, translation by Dr. W. Caland, Calcutta 1931.
 Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa in Auswahl by W. Caland, Amsterdam 1919.

II. MODERN AUTHORS

- E. Arbman, Rudra. Untersuchungen zum altindischen Glauben und Kultus. Upsala, 1922.
 S. D. Atkins, Pūṣan in the Rīgveda. Princeton, 1941.
 L. Barnett, Hindu Gods and Heroes. London, 1922.
 K. L. Bellon, Inleiding tot de natuurlijke godsdienstwetenschap. Antwerpen—Nijmegen, 3e uitg., 1948.
 A. Bergaigne, La Religion Védique d'après les Hymnes du Rīgveda. 3 vol. Paris 1878—1883.
 A. Bertholet, Religionsgeschichtliches Lesebuch. Tübingen, 1903.
 M. Bloomfield, Rīgveda repetitions. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
 — Atharvaveda. Grundriss der indo-arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde 2, 1b. Strassburg, 1899.
 — Atharvaveda. Hymns of the Atharvaveda. S.B.E., vol 42. Oxford 1897.
 — The religion of the Veda. New York, 1908.
 — A Vedic concordance. Cambridge (Mass.), 1906.
 G. H. Tb. Buschan, Illustrierte Völkerkunde. 3 vol., 1922—26.
 P. von Bradke, Dyaus Asura, Ahura Mazda und die Asura. 1855.
 R. N. Dandekar, Der vedische Mensch. Indogerm. Bibl. III, 16. Heidelberg, 1938.
 P. D. Devanandan, The Concept of Māyā. London, 1930.
 G. Dumézil, Mitra Varuṇa. Essai sur deux représentations indo-européennes de la Souveraineté. Paris, 1948.
 — Les dieux des Indo-Européens. Paris, 1952.
 M. Falk, Nāmarūpa and Dharmarūpa. Calcutta, 1943.
 J. N. Farquhar, Outline of the religious literature of India. Oxford, 1920.
 K. F. Geldner, Vedische Studien. 3 Bde.

- Der Rigveda. Göttingen, 1923, vol. 1.
- Der Rigveda. Cambridge (Mass.), 1951, 3 vol.
- Glassnappe, Religionen Indiens. Stuttgart, 1943.

... 1948.

... 147.

W., 1893.

... 12.
... au 1927—1929.

- E. W. Hopkins, Epic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Ir. Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1b. Strassburg, 1896.
- Gods and Saints of the great Brāhmaṇa, in: Transactions of the Conn. Acad. of Arts and Science, vol. 15, 1909.
- Ethics of India. New Haven, 1924.
- The Religions of India. London, 1895.
- H. Jacobi, Entwicklung der Gottesidee bei den Indern. Bonn, 1923.

Wien, 1951.
... indische Religie.
Recht. Groningen, 1939.

- Bh. Kumarappa, The Hindu conception of the deity. London, 1934.
- H. Lüders, Varuna I. Göttingen, 1951.
- A. A. Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, in: Grundriss der Indo-Arischen Philologie und Altertumskunde. Bd. 3. Heft 1a. Strassburg, 1896.
- Lectures on comparative Religion. London, 1925.
- Nicol Macnicol, Indian Theism. London, 1919.
- T. M. P. Mahadevan, The Philosophy of Advaita. London, 1938.
- Gauḍapāda. Madras, 1952.
- L. S. S. O'Malley, Popular Hinduism. The religion of the masses. Cambridge, 1935.
- J. MacKenzie, Hindu Ethics. London, 1922.
- Majumdar, Raychaudhuri, Datta, An advanced History of India. London, 1950.
- G. P. Malalasekera, Dictionary of Pali proper names. London, 1938.

- J. Masson*, La Religion populaire dans le canon Bouddhique Pali. Leuven, 1942.
- P. Masson-Oursel and H. de Willman-Grabowska, and P. Stern*. Ancient India and Indian civilization. London, 1934.
- J. J. Meyer*, Sexual life in Ancient India. London, 2 vol., 1930.
- Trilogie altindischer Mächte und Feste der Vegetation. 3 Bde. Zürich, 1937.
- M. Monier Williams*, A Sanskrit-English Dictionary. Oxford 1888.
- J. Muir*, Original Sanskrit texts. 5 vol. 1884.
- M. Muusses*, Koecultus bij de Hindoes. Utrecht, diss. 1922.
- M. Müller*, Varuna und Mitra, in: Contributions to the Science of Mythology. 2 (1897).
- The Upanisads. SBE, vol. 40. Oxford, 1926.
- Oorsprong en ontwikkeling van den Godsdienst, nagegaan in de godsdiensten van Indië, vert. A. H. Raabe. Utrecht, 1879.
- H. Oldenberg*, Die Religion des Veda. Stuttgart, 1923.
- Die Lehre der Upanisaden und die Anfänge des Buddhismus. Göttingen, 1923.
- P. H. Pott*, Yoga en Yantra en hunne betekenis voor de Indische Archacologie. Leiden, 1946, diss.
- S. Radhakrishnan*, Indian Philosophy, 2 vol. London, 1945.
- The Bhagavad Gita. Text and translation. London, 1949.
- L. Renou*, La poésie religieuse de l'Inde antique. Paris, 1946.
- Bibliography Védique. Paris, 1931.
- L. Renou et E. Benveniste*, Vṛta et Vṛtragna. Cahiers de la société asiatique, III, Paris, 1931.
- L. Renou et J. Filliozat*, L'Inde Classique. Paris, 1947.
- N. Stehoupak, L. Nutti, L. Renou*, Dictionnaire sanskrit français. Paris, 1932.
- St. Rodhe*, Deliver us from evil. Lund. 1946, diss.
- K. Rönnow*, Trisa Aptya. Upsala, 1927, diss.
- W. Ruben*, Die Philosophen der Upanisaden. Bern, 1947.
- O. Schrader (A. Nehring)*, Reallexikon der Indogermanischen Altertumskunde. 2 Bde. Berlin, 1917—1929.
- L. von Schroeder*, Arische Religion. 2 Bde. Leipzig, 1914—1916.
- P. N. Srinivasachari*, The Philosophy of the Visistadvaita. Adyar. 1946.
- P. Thieme*, Studien zur indogerm. Wortkunde und Religionsgeschichte. Berlin, 1952.
- B. A. G. Vroklage*, Godsdiensten der Primitieven. Roermond, 1949.
- A. Walde (J. Pokorny)*, Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der Indogerm. Sprachen. Berlin—Leipzig, 1932—1932.
- H. Zimmer*, Hindu Medicine. Baltimore 1948; Zürich, 1951.
- Myths and Symbols in Indian art and civilization. Washington D.C., 1947.

ABBREVIATIONS

- Ait Br.: Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.
AV.: Atharvaveda Saṃhitā.
BAU: Bṛhad āraṇyaka Upaniṣad.
Ch. Up.: Chāndogya Upaniṣad.
J. Br.: Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa (in Auswahl: Caland).
J. Up. Br.: Jaiminiya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (Oertel).
P. Br.: Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.
RV.: Rigveda Saṃhitā.
S. Br.: Satapatha Brāhmaṇa.
SBE.: Sacred Books of the East.